Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.53

Consultation Question 93.

1.122 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.68

Consultation Question 94.

1.123 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport before the child is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling

and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

1.124 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.125 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or
- (2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.126 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.127 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

1.128 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.129 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.130 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.131 We provisionally propose that:

1.132 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.133 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.134 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.135 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

- (1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and
- (2) if such a restriction is necessary, there should be a process allowing foreign intended parents to remove the child from the jurisdiction of the UK for this purpose and with the approval of the court and, if so, what form should that process take.

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.137 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and
- (2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself.

There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.144 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.145 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.146 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

- (1) when the child was born;
- (2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;
- (3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and
- (4) whether they are a:
 - (a) opposite-sex couple;
 - (b) male same-sex couple;
 - (c) female same-sex couple;
 - (d) single woman; or
 - (e) single man.

N/A

Paragraph 18.2

Consultation Question 110.

1.147 We invite consultees who have experience of applying for a parental order in the UK to tell us:

- (1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;
- (2) whether they had legal advice before the making of the parental order;
- (3) whether they were represented by a lawyer in court; and
- (4) the cost of any legal advice or representation.

N/A

Paragraph 18.4

Consultation Question 111.

1.148 We invite consultees' views as to the impact (social, emotional, financial or otherwise) of the current law where the intended parents are not the legal parents from birth of the child born of the surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 18.6

Consultation Question 112.

1.149 We invite consultees to tell us what they have paid for, or to provide evidence about the cost of:

- (1) medical screening; and
- (2) implications counselling

(where possible separating out the cost of such screening, tests or implications counselling from any other costs involved with fertility treatment).

N/A

1.150 We invite legal consultees, who advise on surrogacy and parental order proceedings, to provide evidence of what they would charge:

- (1) to provide advice sufficient to meet the proposed requirement for independent legal advice discussed in Chapter 13; and

- (2) to draft, advise on and negotiate the written surrogacy agreement required for the new pathway.

N/A

Paragraph 18.8

Consultation Question 113.

1.151 We invite consultees to tell us of the impact of:

- (1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and
- (2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:
 - (a) in the new pathway;
 - (b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or
 - (c) in both situations.

Paragraph 18.11

Consultation Question 114.

1.152 We invite consultees who consider that they might be able to fulfil the role of the independent professional discussed in Chapter 9 to tell us:

- (1) their profession; and
- (2) what they would charge to provide such a service.

N/A

Paragraph 18.13

Consultation Question 115.

1.153 We invite consultees who are intended parents to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

- (1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and

- (2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

1.154 We invite consultees who are surrogates to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

- (1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and
- (2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

Paragraph 18.15

Consultation Question 116.

1.155 We ask consultees who are intended parents to tell us:

- (1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;
- (2) what they spent, in total, on the surrogacy arrangement(s) that led to the birth of their child(ren), including the cost of fertility treatment, payments to the surrogate and payments to any surrogacy agency or organisation;
- (3) how they raised the funds for the surrogacy arrangement(s);
- (4) what they spent on any fertility treatment prior to entering into a surrogacy arrangement (where that treatment did not lead to the birth of a child); and
- (5) how they raised the funds for the fertility treatment.

N/A

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.156 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.157 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with this as I don't understand why it's required. If there is no suggestion the surrogate intended to object, why should the default position upon her death be to further scrutinize the case and the IPs?

To be honest it seems incredibly cruel to put IPs through that when their surrogate has just died.

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

- (1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

- (2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

- (1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and
- (2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

- 1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

- 1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

- 1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

- 1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:
- (1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;
 - (2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or
 - (3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

- 1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:
- (1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,
 - (2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and
 - (3) met eligibility requirements,
- on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

1.12 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;
- (2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and
- (3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

- (1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;
- (2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and
- (3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. * <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

- (1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;
- (2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and
- (3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

- (1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;
- (2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and
- (3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.15 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Consultation Question 16.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

- (1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and
- (2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.17 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Consultation Question 17.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

1.19 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

1.21 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

- (1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:
 - (a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and
 - (b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or
- (2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

1.22 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

- (1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;
- (2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and
- (3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.23 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and
- (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.24 We invite consultees' views:

- (1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and
- (2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:
 - (a) administrative, or
 - (b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.25 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and
- (2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.26 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

- (1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and
- (2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.27 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.28 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

- (1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and
- (2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.29 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

- (1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and
- (2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify a measure that contravenes recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the 'intended parents' should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women's reproductive capacities.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.31 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and
- (2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.140

Consultation Question 30.

1.32 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

1.33 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

N/A

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.34 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.35 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.36 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

- (2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

- (3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.37 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

- (1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;
- (2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;
- (3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;
- (4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and
- (5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

LEAVE ALL CHECK BOXES BLANK (i.e. none of the above)

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.38 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.39 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.40 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.42 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.44 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.45 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

1.46 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

1.47 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

1.48 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

1.49 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.50 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.51 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.52 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.53 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.54 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.
Do consultees agree?

YES

1.55 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;
- (2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:
 - (a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and
 - (b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and
- (3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.56 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

1.57 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

- (1) where his or her legal parents have consented;
- (2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or
- (3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

1.59 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

1.60 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.62 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

- (1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or
- (2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.63 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.64 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.65 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

- (2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:
- (a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or
 - (b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and
- (3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

- 1.66 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

- 1.67 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.68 We invite consultees' views on whether:

- (1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or
- (2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

1.69 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

1.70 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

- (1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but
- (2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.71 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

1.72 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.
Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 12.64

Consultation Question 60.

1.73 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.
Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.74 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.
Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.75 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

- (1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or
- (2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.76 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.77 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

- (1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or
- (2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.79 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.80 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.81 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.82 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.83 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.84 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.85 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.86 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.87 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

- (1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and
- (2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.88 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

- (1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;
- (2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and
- (3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.90 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.91 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.92 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

- (1) based on an allowance;
- (2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or
- (3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.94 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.29

Consultation Question 76.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

- (1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or
- (2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.99 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

- (1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and
- (2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

- (1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;
- (2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or
- (3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.101 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

- (1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or
- (2) left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.103 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am frankly appalled that this question is even being asked. Who do you think should pay for the death of this poor woman? And how is this a justifiable risk. Is a woman's health of less importance than someone else's selfish desire for a baby at all costs?

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

- (1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and
- (2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.105 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. (check box)

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

- (1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or
- (2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

- (1) no other payments;
- (2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;
- (3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;
- (4) lost earnings;
- (5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or
- (6) gifts.

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to make any type of fee or payment to the birth mother for her 'services'.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

- (1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;
- (2) to any miscarriage or termination; or
- (3) some other period of time (please specify).

Leave all check boxes blank.

Again I find myself absolutely appalled that you can ask such questions. Death of mother, stillbirth, miscarriage – not yet mentioned are all the other risks inherent in pregnancy and birth. Is there nothing in our society belonging to women and children that cannot be bought by those rich enough to pay!

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

1.110 We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Paragraph 15.74

Consultation Question 85.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

1.112 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.113 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

- (1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and
- (2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

1.114 We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.115 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

1.119 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the ‘intended parents’ to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur’s recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.68

Consultation Question 94.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child’s country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the ‘intended parents’ to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport before the child is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur’s recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

1.122 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.123 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or

(2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.124 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.125 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

1.126 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.127 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.128 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.129 We provisionally propose that:

1.130 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.131 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.132 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.133 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

- (1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and
- (2) if such a restriction is necessary, there should be a process allowing foreign intended parents to remove the child from the jurisdiction of the UK for this purpose and with the approval of the court and, if so, what form should that process take.

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.134 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.135 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and
- (2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.137 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Consultation Question 107.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself. There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other countries.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason.

Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit.

There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.144 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

- (1) when the child was born;
- (2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;
- (3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and
- (4) whether they are a:
 - (a) opposite-sex couple;
 - (b) male same-sex couple;
 - (c) female same-sex couple;
 - (d) single woman; or
 - (e) single man.

N/A

Paragraph 18.2

Consultation Question 110.

1.145 We invite consultees who have experience of applying for a parental order in the UK to tell us:

- (1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;
- (2) whether they had legal advice before the making of the parental order;
- (3) whether they were represented by a lawyer in court; and
- (4) the cost of any legal advice or representation.

N/A

Paragraph 18.4

Consultation Question 111.

1.146 We invite consultees' views as to the impact (social, emotional, financial or otherwise) of the current law where the intended parents are not the legal parents from birth of the child born of the surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 18.6

Consultation Question 112.

1.147 We invite consultees to tell us what they have paid for, or to provide evidence about the cost of:

- (1) medical screening; and
- (2) implications counselling

(where possible separating out the cost of such screening, tests or implications counselling from any other costs involved with fertility treatment).

N/A

1.148 We invite legal consultees, who advise on surrogacy and parental order proceedings, to provide evidence of what they would charge:

- (1) to provide advice sufficient to meet the proposed requirement for independent legal advice discussed in Chapter 13; and
- (2) to draft, advise on and negotiate the written surrogacy agreement required for the new pathway.

N/A

Paragraph 18.8

Consultation Question 113.

1.149 We invite consultees to tell us of the impact of:

- (1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and
- (2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:
 - (a) in the new pathway;
 - (b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or
 - (c) in both situations.

Paragraph 18.11

Consultation Question 114.

1.150 We invite consultees who consider that they might be able to fulfil the role of the independent professional discussed in Chapter 9 to tell us:

- (1) their profession; and
- (2) what they would charge to provide such a service.

N/A

Paragraph 18.13

Consultation Question 115.

1.151 We invite consultees who are intended parents to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

- (1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and
- (2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

1.152 We invite consultees who are surrogates to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

- (1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and
- (2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

Paragraph 18.15

Consultation Question 116.

1.153 We ask consultees who are intended parents to tell us:

- (1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;
- (2) what they spent, in total, on the surrogacy arrangement(s) that led to the birth of their child(ren), including the cost of fertility treatment, payments to the surrogate and payments to any surrogacy agency or organisation;
- (3) how they raised the funds for the surrogacy arrangement(s);
- (4) what they spent on any fertility treatment prior to entering into a surrogacy arrangement (where that treatment did not lead to the birth of a child); and
- (5) how they raised the funds for the fertility treatment.

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.154 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.155 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

As you will no doubt have gathered, the majority of these responses were copied from Nordic Model Now. This is for several reasons, I am not a legal person and did not understand much of the language of this supposed ""consultation". The wording seems deliberately chosen to confuse..

There are 118 questions which I am led to believe is not in line with the guidelines you are given about creating consultations.

The wording you use does not suggest that you are asking me objectively about the issue _ which is what a consultation by its very nature is supposed to be is it not?

At no point in the 118 questions did you ask me my opinion on surrogacy. At no point was I asked whether I believed surrogacy should be legally allowable, let alone asked me the ethical position.

This consultation is rushed and seriously flawed.

Children are not an item to be owned, parenthood is not a human right, Women do however have a human right to full ownership of every part of our bodies, and we are not for sale, rent or hire!

Chapter 6: The parental order procedure

8 Consultation Question 1:

Other

Please provide your views below:

An exception should apply if all parties are habitually resident in the UK but choose to use a clinic abroad for treatment. Provided they have met the requirements of the new pathway they shouldn't need to go to the High Court.

Please provide your views below:

Provided they have appropriate experience.

9 Consultation Question 2:

Please provide your views below:

As there will be a reduction in the number of domestic cases being heard via this route, the level of experience in this area will reduce, particularly in areas where surrogacy cases are less common such as the [REDACTED] where I reside. I'm already aware of cases where the parents are in [REDACTED] but the case is heard in [REDACTED], for example. Awareness of surrogacy and the application of the law is more important than the level of judiciary. Perhaps a pragmatic approach would be that lay justices need to have undertaken some mandatory training to hear a surrogacy case.

10 Consultation Question 3: We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Please provide your views below:

11 Consultation Question 4:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

In my experience of parental orders it is most common that this is a paper based exercise if this were the case it would be important to ensure the the courts can accommodate the prompt arrangement of the directions order.

12 Consultation Question 5: We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the Family Procedure Rules 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

There could be an argument that this would be covered by GDPR and it should be freely available.

13 Consultation Question 6:

Please provide your views below:

Wherever possible the Law Commission should seek to remove inconsistencies between Scotland and the rest of the UK. It is very common that surrogacy 'teams' have members in both countries, it seems strange that two babies born through surrogacy in the same hospital will have different officials involved in confirming their parenthood due to where they live. The paper gives the example of a a Scottish couple who achieved the parental order without legal representation. Documentation should be clear to ensure that parents through surrogacy in Scotland are able to access the parental order process in the same manner as those in England.

Chapter 8: Legal Parenthood: Proposals for Reform - A New Pathway

14 Consultation Question 7:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

However as a surrogate I do not agree with the surrogate's 'right to object' post birth. The intended parents are the parents and should be recognised from birth without delay.

15 Consultation Question 8:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

100 years; or

Please provide your views below:

100 years seems pragmatic for an arrangement which results in a live birth. There is no indication here what will happen for arrangements which end in miscarriage or teams which end after a period of trying to conceive.

16 Consultation Question 9: We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

17 Consultation Question 10: We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

18 Consultation Question 11:

No

Please provide your views below:

Grounds of objection should be supplied, specific grounds such as information came to light that wasn't previously disclosed, a conviction subsequent to the DBS etc..

The defined period of registration less one week is impractical, inconsistent and does not reflect the wishes of UK surrogates. I would like the intended parents to be recognised as the child's parents from birth.

The inconsistency between Scotland and England is a key point here which should not be ignored and makes this concept seem particularly arbitrary.

There is an issue here about the birth certificate here, we will have parents who can't register their child at the GP as they don't have one until the period has expired. As birth is registered where baby was born this could often mean a long journey across the country with a young baby at 3 /5 weeks old working within the window available and with many restrictions on the availability of appointments, which clearly is not in the interests of the child.

If a defined period is the only option a compromise may be 10 days post birth, this is the period after which care transfers from the midwife to the health visitor and would feel the most natural point as the NHS treats the person who has given birth and the baby differently from this stage. If there were any concerns about the surrogate's wellbeing there has been an opportunity to explore this at several points by the 10 day check.

19 Consultation Question 12:

No

Please provide your views below:

- (1) In the rare circumstances of a surrogate objecting to default to the surrogate being the legal parent is wrong and not in the spirit of the agreement they have all freely entered into after all the appropriate checks.
- (2) Giving 'biology' privilege is a real concern here, by looking at TS and GS in the same way to then switch to prioritising biological link over the care-giver is disappointing. The surrogate may object on the grounds that the IPs have split up but then to say that you would give the legal parenthood to the one of them that is biologically related is unfair. Statistically this will disproportionately have a negative impact on women who are less likely to be biologically related than a man in a surrogacy arrangement. Consideration to this should be given in any equality impact assessment should this proposal be upheld.
- (3) This seems as though it is the only option should the right to object be maintained however the parental order process needs to be fit for purpose should this be the case.

20 Consultation Question 13:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

It is unclear here whether legal parenthood would revert to the surrogate until the IPs apply for a parental order. If there are concerns about capacity of the surrogate it is more important than ever that the IPs retain parental responsibility during this period.

21 Consultation Question 14:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Existing provisions of health visitor etc.. that would apply to any parent should apply to this case.

Further consideration needs to be given here to where surrogacy teams switch from GS to TS or TS to GS which has happened in many surrogacy situations I am aware of. Clarification on whether a reassessment is required or whether the clinic / surrogacy organisation would accept the assessment of the other.

22 Consultation Question 15:

Other

Please provide your views below:

In the main I agree however there is some disconnect in the proposed legislation for the expectations of the surrogate's partner in the new pathway requirements whilst he could not have legal responsibility. In a traditional surrogacy arrangement where the couple have biological children he may have a view based on the fact the child through surrogacy is a half-sibling to his other child(ren) should an issue arise.

23 Consultation Question 16:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Having lost a surrogate baby prior to the 'stillbirth period' () I think it is very important that the intended parents as well as the surrogate are able to make decisions collectively with regard to the post-mortem arrangements of the child. Whilst more for guidance than legislature there should be some recognition that whilst decisions during pregnancy must ultimately rest with the surrogate there are some circumstance such as those I experienced where the decisions relate to the baby rather than the surrogate's health. Outcomes of a post mortem may provide information of benefit to the IPs and/or surrogate if looking to conceive again and the handling of baby's remains must be treated with sensitivity to all parties.

24 Consultation Question 17: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth. Do consultees agree?

25 Consultation Question 18: For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

Please provide your views below:

I strongly disagree. If the whole intention of the new pathway is to complete the checks up front why should the death of the surrogate change this? Particularly in the context the surrogate's partner / husband has no parental responsibility under the pathway. The death of the surrogate would already be a distressing circumstance to then add further paperwork and court hearings seems very strange and contrary to the surrogate's wishes. Provided the arrangement is in line with her will expressing her wishes there should be no need to deviate from the pathway.

26 Consultation Question 19:

Please provide your views below:

Option 1 is far more preferable, the child was created for its parents through surrogacy and they should be designated as such with their wishes for guardianship respected.

As a surrogate I would be devastated if I lost my IPs to then have the baby registered with me as the mother rather than the IPs would be a terrible blow.

28 Consultation Question 21: We invite consultees' views as to: (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

Please provide your views below:

This would only be appropriate in extreme cases such as a stillbirth or miscarriage /early birth of a child where decisions need to be made in relation to post mortem. The intended parents should always be those on the birth certificate.

Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

The surrogate should not have nor do I (as a surrogate) wish to have parental responsibility for someone else's child. The parenthood should be in place from birth, the only potential compromise could be 10 days post birth as indicated above.

36 Consultation Question 29:

Please provide your views below:

PR should not apply to a surrogate post birth unless the baby has died early.

Chapter 9: The Regulation of Surrogacy Arrangements

37 Consultation Question 30: We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

strongly agree, from a surrogate's perspective I felt no difference having done both TS and GS.

38 Consultation Question 31: We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

Please provide your views below:

I met my first IPs independently via a website however we joined Surrogacy UK as a team for further support and our agreement. We had counselling and legal advice, via clinic and SUK.

45 Consultation Question 37: We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

I'm not sure this will be practical considering the number of social media channels on which people can network and engage, unless these people can at least pursue a PO route. If not there is a risk that people won't properly register the child, defeating all of the great work proposed by having a register.

46 Consultation Question 38: We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

Please provide your views below:

See above, online organisations can change from day to day, I'm not sure there will be practical ways to police this / hold individuals accountable.

47 Consultation Question 39: We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood. 49 Consultation Question 41: We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

Other

The arrangements themselves should be facilitated independently without either party having 'engaged' a paid for service, reducing the risk they are acting in favour of either party - i.e. a not for profit organisation.

50 Consultation Question 42: We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

Some restrictions should remain to ensure this is handled ethically. I agree the law should be relaxed however where there is a space that individuals may advertise themselves personally there is a risk / opportunity for deception / fraud.

As part of HFEAs audit of organisations I would anticipate that they examine the targeting and advertising spend of organisations.

Chapter 10: Children's Access to Information About Surrogacy Arrangements

51 Consultation Question 43: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18. Do consultees agree?

52 Consultation Question 44: We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement. Chapter 11: Eligibility Criteria for a Parental Order

62 Consultation Question 54: We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished. Do consultees agree?

Please provide your views below:

There should still be some impetus for IPs to act promptly as it is not in the interests of surrogates to retain PR for any longer than is needed. Perhaps a guideline of 6 months with some flexibility.

The Law Commission should be mindful that this links to some employment issues where I am aware of cases that IPs have been told they must show evidence of the parental order 'within 6 months' to qualify for enhanced / occupational / statutory adoption pay. Some of the guidance on the government guidance available regarding surrogacy is confusing for employers and they don't always interpret this correctly, abolishing the 6 months could assist with this issue but if so needs to be done with caution.

69 Consultation Question 61: We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order. The quality of counselling across the UK is very varied, if this was opened to TS arrangements it is very important that resources be made available to ensure appropriately trained counselling is available which is of benefit. It may be that this could be provided by appropriately trained individuals in a surrogacy organisation.

76 Consultation Question 68: We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

The agreement itself should not be facilitated by the solicitor. It is key that the quality of legal counsel across the UK is improved should these sessions be deemed as mandatory. 86 Consultation Question 78:

Please provide your views below:

This could be difficult to quantify due to Universal Credit rules but yes in principle if directly related. Less likely in an expenses model.

87 Consultation Question 79:

Please provide your views below:

Expenses should be based on actual expenses incurred and not a set fee for a particular complication as these will impact different women in different ways. For example if I had a C section the costs would be substantial as I am very reliant on my car for travel and due to school arrangements, when I had a miscarriage at 12 weeks the costs were minimal however in the months later I required counselling. To put a 'price' or 'figure' on these aspects is a move towards commercial surrogacy which as a surrogate I wholly oppose. There is no financial compensation that could have mitigated the impact of losing my friend's son, the support of Surrogacy UK and my friends was what was important as surrogacy is based on a relationship and not a transaction.

Please provide your views below:

You cannot compensate surrogacy and there should not be an attempt to do so. This is a dangerous move towards commercialisation.

88 Consultation Question 80: We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

Please provide your views below:

Covering life insurance only until 6 months post birth is appropriate.

89 Consultation Question 81:

Please provide your views below:

During the surrogacy relationship extravagant gifts should not be permitted and are not wanted (from myself as a surrogate). An appropriate rule of thumb could be meeting the 'trivial' definition from HMRC - less than £50 in value. IPs may wish to buy presents for family members these should be equally of a trivial value.

90 Consultation Question 82:

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

Please provide your views below:

Surrogacy is not a service or job and should never been seen as such. To do so will tarnish the altruistic nature and motivation of surrogates.

This is dependent upon the outcome, it should be based on actual expenses and therefore the parental order route should stay within that with an understanding that they may be local variances for international surrogacy.

[REDACTED] -

Whilst this is my personal perspective having experienced surrogacy first hand I'm aware many of my 'surro sisters' feel this way and I hope to give a voice to altruistic surrogates here.

You are putting yourself through so much surely some financial compensation would be appropriate?

It's our dream too... as surrogates we set upon our journeys with a shared hope, we want to create and complete families. Surrogacy isn't a job, it's a passion and the relationships we have with the parents are based on trust and friendship. Anything more than expenses changes the dynamic and would make me feel like an employee. It's a huge responsibility looking after your friends' baby but to be being paid for that would make me feel like I was working for the parents rather than being a friend with a shared dream.

[REDACTED] recently stated on twitter that US surrogates (who do receive compensation) say that when you work it out to an hourly rate it is such a tiny amount. When you start thinking about compensation and working things out to an hourly rate you actually realise how ridiculous it is, there is no financial amount that would be appropriate to 'compensate' someone for surrogacy so why try to put a price on it? A surrogacy journey is not just the surrogate, it affects our husbands and partners, our children, our hobbies, our whole lives. There is no 'pause' button in surrogacy, you aren't a nanny who can take a day off now and again. This is why surrogacy relationships should be based on friendship.

[REDACTED] loss has affected me as a surrogate. It is now 9 months since I lost my friends' little boy and I think about him every single day, there is no amount of financial compensation that could have covered this, I find peace knowing that my friends are still there for me because our relationship is based on trust and not a transaction.

If the parents want to treat you, why not?

Most intended parents have had to face terrible inequalities in their journey to parenthood, due to disability, illness or simply falling in love with someone of the same gender.

As a surrogate I am acutely aware of the sacrifices my friends have had to go through in order to become parents or step towards that dream. In a situation where, lavish gifts are permitted or payments above expenses allowed, further inequalities are created and surrogacy could become beyond the means of intended parents who are so deserving of the opportunity to be parents.

Wouldn't it be easier for you if you didn't have to keep evidence of expenses?

Yes of course it would but no woman goes into surrogacy for an easy life! Believe me, when you have been up 3 or 4 times during the night, can no longer see your toes and your kids haven't been able to wrap their arms around you for a hug for the past 3 months; expenses are no bother! Keeping a spreadsheet up to date and collecting receipts to ensure evidence is available for the parental order is the easy bit of the journey. I am proud to be able to account for my expenses and share these with the intended parents. At Surrogacy UK surrogates are given advice to ensure that expenses are appropriate and specific to the individual.

Moving to a system with a 'flat fee' based on an average may lead to some surrogates; such as those with several children of their own or a high loss of earnings actually being out of pocket as a result of a surrogacy journey.

The law needs to be reformed, surely, we have to consider payments at the same time?

Actually no, as a surrogate I am passionate about legal reform on issues such as having the correct parents recognised from birth on the birth certificate. These legal changes can be made without the need to impose a system of fees / compensation or payments. These are very separate issues and those who lump them together are doing a disservice to reforming the law and tackling the concerns of intended parents and surrogates.

Recently we have seen improved government guidance for health professionals and individuals in relation to surrogacy. These documents were created by working groups with representatives for the surrogacy community, surely some clear and concise guidance in relation to expenses could follow a similar route?

Can't we just have two systems in the UK?

I don't believe that an altruistic and commercial system of surrogacy can run side by side in the UK.

I can not see how the two systems would be differentiated. As a surrogate I deal with a lot of misunderstandings even with the current system.

There are two questions I get asked all the time; are you doing it for your friends? Do you get paid?

I am proud to answer that yes I am helping my friends and no I don't get paid.

Any element of commercialism would mean contracts and lawyers, surrogacy would naturally become more expensive and I do not believe these changes would in fact give any additional protection to intended parents.

The rare challenging cases which make it to the high court are more often than not international rather than UK surrogacy cases and family judges have shown some discretion in how the law has been applied in those cases.

If there is an argument for two systems the appropriate two systems to reflect custom and practice would not be to offer a commercial option in the UK, but to offer a different approach to compensation where this is legal in the surrogate's country of residence in comparison with UK surrogates whom can only have expenses covered.

In this debate it is important that we do not forget that surrogacy is about creating human lives, those little people whom the intended parents trust us to care for, nurture and bring into the arms of their loved ones. Mutual trust and respect (with guidance and support) rather than contracts and fees should be the foundations of a surrogacy relationship. For love... not money.

I would (with much sadness) walk away from surrogacy if a commercialised model was introduced in the UK and I'm confident I would not be alone in this.

Please provide your views below:

The arrangements are probably provided but some guidance to employers in this area would be of benefit.

I also plan to return to work while expressing for my next surrobaby but am not a 'nursing mother'

113 Consultation Question 105: We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

There is a real lack of awareness by employers and although some information on .gov this is very limited. The government should work with employers associations and professional bodies such as the cipd to provide guidance to employers in this area.

Surrogates want to be assured that parents will be recognised as such from birth, whilst the pathway makes steps towards this these are very limited.

Accessibility as such is not necessarily an issue for surrogates, what is important is that surrogacy is based on trust and not commercialised.

From a personal perspective I could not afford to be a surrogate under a 'fee system' that was taxable, my own current expenses + 40% tax would be £19,880 and in excess of what most couples would be able to afford. This would not include anything for a C section or unplanned emergency. More importantly however it would mean being paid for surrogacy which I would wholly oppose. I have a job and could never be comfortable with surrogacy being classed in this regard.

I am concerned that unless expenses are treated as expenses only many genuine altruistic surrogates, motivated for the right reasons will find it difficult to be a surrogate in this situation.

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

- (1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

- (2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

(1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and

(2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration.

Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

- (1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;
- (2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or
- (3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

- (1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,

- (2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and
- (3) met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

- 1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

1.12 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;

- (2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and
- (3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

- (1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;
- (2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and
- (3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. * <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

- (1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;
- (2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and
- (3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

- (1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;
- (2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and
- (3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.17 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

- (1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and
- (2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.19 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Paragraph 8.77

Consultation Question 17.

1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

1.21 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

- 1.22 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

- 1.23 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:
- (1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:
 - (a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and
 - (b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or
 - (2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

- 1.24 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

- (1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;
- (2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and
- (3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.25 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and
- (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.26 We invite consultees' views:

- (1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and
- (2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:

- (a) administrative, or
- (b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.27 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and
- (2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.28 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

- (1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and
- (2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.29 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

- (1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and
- (2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.31 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

- (1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and
- (2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify a measure that contravenes recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to ‘object’. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.32 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the ‘intended parents’ should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child’s best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women’s reproductive capacities.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.33 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees’ views as to:

- (1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

- (2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.140

Consultation Question 30.

- 1.34 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

- 1.35 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

N/A

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.36 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.37 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.38 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

- (2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

- (3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.39 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

- (1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;
- (2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;
- (3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;
- (4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and
- (5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

LEAVE ALL CHECK BOXES BLANK (i.e. none of the above)

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.40 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.42 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.44 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.45 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.46 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.47 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

1.48 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

1.49 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

1.50 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

1.51 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.52 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.53 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.54 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.55 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.56 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.57 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;
- (2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:
 - (a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and
 - (b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and
- (3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

- 1.59 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

- 1.60 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

- (1) where his or her legal parents have consented;
- (2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or
- (3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

- 1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

- 1.62 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.63 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.64 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

- (1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or
- (2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.65 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.66 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.67 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

- (2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:
 - (a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or
 - (b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and
- (3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.68 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.69 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.70 We invite consultees' views on whether:

- (1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or
- (2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

- 1.71 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

- 1.72 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

- (1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but
- (2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

- 1.73 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

- 1.74 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Consultation Question 60.

1.75 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.76 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.77 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

- (1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or
- (2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.79 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.80 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

- (1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or
- (2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.81 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.82 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.83 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood.

I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.84 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.85 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.86 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for a 'new pathway'. At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.87 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.88 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

- (1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and
- (2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.90 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.91 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

- (1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;
- (2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and
- (3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.92 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.94 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

- (1) based on an allowance;
- (2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or
- (3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Consultation Question 76.

1.99 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

- (1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or
- (2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.101 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

- (1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and
- (2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

- (1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;
- (2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or
- (3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.103 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

- (1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or
- (2) left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.105 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

- (1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and
- (2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. (check box)

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

- (1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or
- (2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

- (1) no other payments;
- (2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;
- (3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;
- (4) lost earnings;
- (5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or
- (6) gifts.

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to make any type of fee or payment to the birth mother for her 'services'.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.110 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

- (1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;
- (2) to any miscarriage or termination; or
- (3) some other period of time (please specify).

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

1.112 We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Paragraph 15.74

Consultation Question 85.

1.113 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

1.114 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.115 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

- (1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and
- (2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

1.116 We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.117 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

1.118 We invite overseas surrogates (or bodies representing or advocating for surrogates) to share with us their experiences of international surrogacy arrangements.

Paragraph 16.12

Consultation Question 91.

1.120 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of their experience of applying to register a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement as a British citizen and obtaining a passport for the child. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have about causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.53

Consultation Question 93.

1.122 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. Paragraph 16.68

Consultation Question 94.

1.123 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport before the child is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling

and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

1.124 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.125 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or
- (2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.126 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.127 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.129 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.130 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.131 We provisionally propose that:

1.132 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.133 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.134 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.135 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

- (1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and
- (2) if such a restriction is necessary, there should be a process allowing foreign intended parents to remove the child from the jurisdiction of the UK for this purpose and with the approval of the court and, if so, what form should that process take.

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.137 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and
- (2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself.

There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.144 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.145 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy

arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.146 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

- (1) when the child was born;
- (2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;
- (3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and
- (4) whether they are a:
 - (a) opposite-sex couple;
 - (b) male same-sex couple;
 - (c) female same-sex couple;
 - (d) single woman; or
 - (e) single man.

N/A

Paragraph 18.2

Consultation Question 110.

1.147 We invite consultees who have experience of applying for a parental order in the UK to tell us:

- (1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;
- (2) whether they had legal advice before the making of the parental order;
- (3) whether they were represented by a lawyer in court; and
- (4) the cost of any legal advice or representation.

N/A

Paragraph 18.4

Consultation Question 111.

1.148 We invite consultees' views as to the impact (social, emotional, financial or otherwise) of the current law where the intended parents are not the legal parents from birth of the child born of the surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 18.6

Consultation Question 112.

1.149 We invite consultees to tell us what they have paid for, or to provide evidence about the cost of:

- (1) medical screening; and
- (2) implications counselling

(where possible separating out the cost of such screening, tests or implications counselling from any other costs involved with fertility treatment).

N/A

1.150 We invite legal consultees, who advise on surrogacy and parental order proceedings, to provide evidence of what they would charge:

- (1) to provide advice sufficient to meet the proposed requirement for independent legal advice discussed in Chapter 13; and

- (2) to draft, advise on and negotiate the written surrogacy agreement required for the new pathway.

N/A

Paragraph 18.8

Consultation Question 113.

1.151 We invite consultees to tell us of the impact of:

- (1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and
- (2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:
 - (a) in the new pathway;
 - (b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or
 - (c) in both situations.

Paragraph 18.11

Consultation Question 114.

1.152 We invite consultees who consider that they might be able to fulfil the role of the independent professional discussed in Chapter 9 to tell us:

- (1) their profession; and
- (2) what they would charge to provide such a service.

N/A

Paragraph 18.13

Consultation Question 115.

1.153 We invite consultees who are intended parents to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

- (1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and

- (2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

1.154 We invite consultees who are surrogates to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

- (1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and
- (2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

Paragraph 18.15

Consultation Question 116.

1.155 We ask consultees who are intended parents to tell us:

- (1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;
- (2) what they spent, in total, on the surrogacy arrangement(s) that led to the birth of their child(ren), including the cost of fertility treatment, payments to the surrogate and payments to any surrogacy agency or organisation;
- (3) how they raised the funds for the surrogacy arrangement(s);
- (4) what they spent on any fertility treatment prior to entering into a surrogacy arrangement (where that treatment did not lead to the birth of a child); and
- (5) how they raised the funds for the fertility treatment.

N/A

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.156 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.157 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

- (1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

- (2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

(1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and

(2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration.

Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

- (1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;
- (2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or
- (3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

- (1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,

- (2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and
- (3) met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

- 1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

1.12 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;

- (2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and
- (3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

- (1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;
- (2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and
- (3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

- (1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;
- (2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and
- (3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

- (1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;
- (2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and
- (3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.17 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

- (1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and
- (2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.19 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Paragraph 8.77

Consultation Question 17.

1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

1.21 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

1.22 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

1.23 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

- (1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:
 - (a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and
 - (b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or
- (2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

1.24 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

- (1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;
- (2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and
- (3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.25 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and
- (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.26 We invite consultees' views:

- (1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and
- (2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:

- (a) administrative, or
- (b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.27 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and
- (2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.28 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

- (1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and
- (2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.29 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

- (1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and
- (2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.31 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

- (1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and
- (2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify a measure that contravenes recommendations of

Consultation Question 28.

1.32 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the ‘intended parents’ should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child’s best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women’s reproductive capacities.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.33 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees’ views as to:

- (1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

- (2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.140

Consultation Question 30.

- 1.34 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

- 1.35 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

N/A

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.36 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.37 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.38 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

- (2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

- (3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.39 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

- (1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;
- (2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;
- (3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;
- (4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and
- (5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

LEAVE ALL CHECK BOXES BLANK (i.e. none of the above)

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.40 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.42 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.44 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.45 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.46 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.47 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

- 1.48 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

- 1.49 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

- 1.50 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

- 1.51 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.52 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.53 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.54 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.55 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.56 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.57 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;
- (2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:
 - (a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and
 - (b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and
- (3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

- 1.59 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

- 1.60 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

- (1) where his or her legal parents have consented;
- (2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or
- (3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

- 1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

- 1.62 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.63 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.64 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

- (1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or
- (2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.65 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.66 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.67 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

- (2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:
 - (a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or
 - (b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and
- (3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.68 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.69 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.70 We invite consultees' views on whether:

- (1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or
- (2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

- 1.71 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

- 1.72 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

- (1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but
- (2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

- 1.73 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

- 1.74 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Consultation Question 60.

1.75 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.76 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.77 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

- (1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or
- (2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.79 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.80 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

- (1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or
- (2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.81 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.82 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.83 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood.

I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.84 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.85 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.86 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.87 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.88 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

- (1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and
- (2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.90 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.91 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

- (1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;
- (2) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and
- (3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.92 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.94 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

- (1) based on an allowance;
- (2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or
- (3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Consultation Question 76.

1.99 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

- (1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or
- (2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.101 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

- (1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and
- (2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

- (1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;
- (2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or
- (3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.103 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

- (1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or
- (2) left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.105 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

- (1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and
- (2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. (check box)

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

- (1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or
- (2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

- (1) no other payments;
- (2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;
- (3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;
- (4) lost earnings;
- (5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or
- (6) gifts.

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to make any type of fee or payment to the birth mother for her 'services'.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.110 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

- (1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;
- (2) to any miscarriage or termination; or
- (3) some other period of time (please specify).

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

1.112 We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Paragraph 15.74

Consultation Question 85.

1.113 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

1.114 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.115 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

- (1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and
- (2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

1.116 We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.117 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

Paragraph 15.99

Consultation Question 89.

1.118 We invite overseas surrogates (or bodies representing or advocating for surrogates) to share with us their experiences of international surrogacy arrangements.

N/A

Paragraph 16.10

Consultation Question 90.

1.119 We invite organisations focused on children's rights and welfare in the international context to share with us their views on our proposed reforms and consultation questions in this chapter.

N/A

Paragraph 16.12

Consultation Question 91.

1.120 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of their experience of applying to register a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement as a British citizen and obtaining a passport for the child. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have about causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 16.53

Consultation Question 93.

1.122 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.68

Consultation Question 94.

1.123 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport before the child is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling

and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

1.124 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.125 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or
- (2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.126 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.127 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

1.128 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.129 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.130 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.131 We provisionally propose that:

1.132 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.133 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.134 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.135 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

- (1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and
- (2) if such a restriction is necessary, there should be a process allowing foreign intended parents to remove the child from the jurisdiction of the UK for this purpose and with the approval of the court and, if so, what form should that process take.

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.137 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and
- (2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself.

There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.144 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.145 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy

arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.146 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

- (1) when the child was born;
- (2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;
- (3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and
- (4) whether they are a:
 - (a) opposite-sex couple;
 - (b) male same-sex couple;
 - (c) female same-sex couple;
 - (d) single woman; or
 - (e) single man.

N/A

Paragraph 18.2

Consultation Question 110.

1.147 We invite consultees who have experience of applying for a parental order in the UK to tell us:

- (1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;
- (2) whether they had legal advice before the making of the parental order;
- (3) whether they were represented by a lawyer in court; and
- (4) the cost of any legal advice or representation.

N/A

Paragraph 18.4

Consultation Question 111.

1.148 We invite consultees' views as to the impact (social, emotional, financial or otherwise) of the current law where the intended parents are not the legal parents from birth of the child born of the surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 18.6

Consultation Question 112.

1.149 We invite consultees to tell us what they have paid for, or to provide evidence about the cost of:

- (1) medical screening; and
- (2) implications counselling

(where possible separating out the cost of such screening, tests or implications counselling from any other costs involved with fertility treatment).

N/A

1.150 We invite legal consultees, who advise on surrogacy and parental order proceedings, to provide evidence of what they would charge:

- (1) to provide advice sufficient to meet the proposed requirement for independent legal advice discussed in Chapter 13; and

- (2) to draft, advise on and negotiate the written surrogacy agreement required for the new pathway.

N/A

Paragraph 18.8

Consultation Question 113.

1.151 We invite consultees to tell us of the impact of:

- (1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and
- (2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:
 - (a) in the new pathway;
 - (b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or
 - (c) in both situations.

Paragraph 18.11

Consultation Question 114.

1.152 We invite consultees who consider that they might be able to fulfil the role of the independent professional discussed in Chapter 9 to tell us:

- (1) their profession; and
- (2) what they would charge to provide such a service.

N/A

Paragraph 18.13

Consultation Question 115.

1.153 We invite consultees who are intended parents to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

- (1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and

- (2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

1.154 We invite consultees who are surrogates to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

- (1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and
- (2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

Paragraph 18.15

Consultation Question 116.

1.155 We ask consultees who are intended parents to tell us:

- (1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;
- (2) what they spent, in total, on the surrogacy arrangement(s) that led to the birth of their child(ren), including the cost of fertility treatment, payments to the surrogate and payments to any surrogacy agency or organisation;
- (3) how they raised the funds for the surrogacy arrangement(s);
- (4) what they spent on any fertility treatment prior to entering into a surrogacy arrangement (where that treatment did not lead to the birth of a child); and
- (5) how they raised the funds for the fertility treatment.

N/A

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.156 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.157 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Chapter 6: The parental order procedure

8 Consultation Question 1:

No

Please provide your views below:

There should be international agreements in place in order for the international surrogacy to be immediately recognised or where not possible a quick procedure should be defined

Please provide your views below:

There should be no need to go through a judge, a quicker procedure should be designed

9 Consultation Question 2:

Please provide your views below:

I don't think domestic surrogacy should require a post birth parental order, unless there is a dispute or some other issue has arisen.
I am not sure for those special cases which would be the right level of the judiciary

10 Consultation Question 3: We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Please provide your views below:

11 Consultation Question 4:

Other

Please provide your views below:

I believe that parental status should not be awarded through a judicial proceeding and after the child is born, I think it should be assigned by a contract signed by the parties before the pregnancy starts so that the parental status is always recognizing the intended parent as the parent and no court hearing is needed

12 Consultation Question 5: We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the Family Procedure Rules 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise. Do consultees agree?

Chapter 8: Legal Parenthood: Proposals for Reform - A New Pathway

14 Consultation Question 7:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

I fully agree with this proposal and think that the surrogate right to object should be limited to very few and exceptional circumstances

15 Consultation Question 8:

Other

Please provide your views below:

I agree

100 years; or

Please provide your views below:

16 Consultation Question 9: We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

It should be possible to use anonymously donated gametes if they are healthy

17 Consultation Question 10: We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

No I don't think it should prevent it at all. All surrogacy types should enter the new pathway

18 Consultation Question 11:

No

Please provide your views below:

The right to object should be defined only for some specific motivations and should be limited to no more than 2 weeks after birth

19 Consultation Question 12:

No

Please provide your views below:

I fully disagree.

If the surrogate object to the intended parent to gain parenthood the intended parents should still remain the parent until the case has been heard by a judge and a decision has been taken.

the possibility for the surrogate to raise such objections should be limited to very specific motivations for the sake of the child

20 Consultation Question 13:

No

Please provide your views below:

No I don't agree. such declaration should be signed at the same time as a contract is signed so at the inception before the pregnancy starts

21 Consultation Question 14:

Other

Please provide your views below:

22 Consultation Question 15:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

The spouse or partner of a surrogate should never be a legal parent of the child

No

Please share your views below:

No they should not become a legal parent of the child

23 Consultation Question 16:

Other

Please provide your views below:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

24 Consultation Question 17: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I am not sure why there would be surrogacy agreements outside the new pathway. I think the ratio should be to simplify things

25 Consultation Question 18: For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

Please provide your views below:

Absolutely not. first of all I don't see why there should be a new pathway and an old pathway. there should be only one way of doing it, less complicated and more straightforward. Parenthood should be assigned clearly at conception of the child. there should be very little to no reason why the surrogate mother could object and if she dies even more it is important that the newborn is in safe care of the parents (intended parents)

26 Consultation Question 19:

Other

Please provide your views below:

The parent should be registered as parents at birth in any circumstances

Please provide your views below:

Please see my points above

27 Consultation Question 20:

Other

Please provide your views below:

I only agree with points 2 and 3 if the child has genetic material (egg or sperm) of the second intended parent, but in case the second parent has truncated the relationship, the first parent should be allowed to go ahead with the surrogacy on his own

28 Consultation Question 21: We invite consultees' views as to: (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

Please provide your views below:

Absolutely contrary to this propositions.

It makes no sense and confuses things even more. It would make the situation very complicated for the intended parents and emotionally catastrophic for the surrogate mother

29 Consultation Question 22:

Please provide your views below:

no further oversight if a proper contract was in place from before conception

35 Consultation Question 28: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object. Do consultees agree?

Hello,

I'm afraid I lack the time to answer your questionnaire but as a UK citizen, a woman, and a mother I would like to offer feedback to the surrogacy consultation.

- *The needs of any children born via surrogacy should be centred (I do not see much evidence of this in the consultation thus far).
- *There should be NO advertising of/for surrogacy
- *There should be NO internationalization of surrogacy.
- *Minimum age for surrogacy should be 25.
- *No woman deemed to be high-risk for pregnancy for any reason should be allowed to act as a SM.
- *IPs should be required to pay for any and all medical costs incurred by the SM as a result of the pregnancy, including those arising later in life (e.g. vaginal prolapse, incontinence, etc.) and including any mental health/counselling needs.
- *IPs should be required to pay for life insurance for the SM so
- *Counselling and legal representation for the SM should be required and should be funded by the IPs. The SM should have her choice of services (rather than having this chosen by the IPs on her behalf).
- *Maximum number of surrogate pregnancies per individual SM should be limited to one
- *IPs should also cover any and all medical costs incurred by any egg donors involved in the pregnancy, including those arising later in life
- *The SM should always retain the right to terminate the pregnancy at any stage and for any reason without punitive measures being taken.
- *The child's right to have a relationship with its birth mother (the SM) should never be removed or restricted by the IPs.
- *Where is the assessment showing the impact on the NHS of surrogacy?
- *If the work of the SM is considered "altruistic" and therefore to be uncompensated, then so should the work of others involved in the SP, e.g. solicitors, doctors, etc. Pregnancy carries significant risks and I fail to see why the single person at risk should be uncompensated if others will make money from the process. However, I also believe that fee-based surrogacy is essentially the sale of women's wombs and the sale of children to those who can afford to pay, and the UK should not tolerate this as it is a serious violation of the human rights of children and of vulnerable women. I believe surrogacy should be banned and that the "new pathway" is abhorrent.
- *I also believe that this consultation breaches a number of the Consultation Principles 2018 and would like to see this publicly addressed.

Please contact me if you have any questions. Thank you for your time.

Chapter 6: The parental order procedure

8 Consultation Question 1:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

All cases of international surrogacy are a site of a crime conducted against economically deprived women. Economic deprivation is the reason that international surrogacy not only exists, but is referenced in the supporting documents of this consultation as comprising of a majority of cases of surrogacy 'arrangements' commissioned by UK citizens. Women who are coerced into this practice are known to have little ability to make choices in their own life, and thus the practice of international surrogacy can only be understood to be a crime against women internationally. Should the UK wish to participate in such crimes against humanity it had best represent itself to its fullest capacity in the high courts.

Please provide your views below:

To not allocate all suspected international surrogacy cases to the high court would expose Great Britain to have a culture supportive of the trafficking of human life and the reproductive slavery of economically deprived women. As this is the most serious of human rights explorations, no less than the highest of supreme courts should hear such a case.

9 Consultation Question 2:

Please provide your views below:

In the consultation documents, you propose that the only domestic surrogacy cases that would require a post-birth parental order would be those that the birth mother (surrogate) has contested. There is a reason why Switzerland, Norway, Germany, France and many other first-world countries have outlawed all forms of surrogacy, and this is due to the extremely serious human rights violations it incurs once commissioning parents begin to believe that they have ownership over the bodies of other humans. This includes their believed right to interfere with biological and psychological bonding between the only two humans present in the creation of the child - the birth mother and the baby. Only the most senior judges should oversee such violations of human rights and the fraught ethical implications of the contested 'ownership' of human beings.

10 Consultation Question 3: We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Please provide your views below:

11 Consultation Question 4:

No

Please provide your views below:

The default position must always be that the duty and care of the child remains with the birth mother in order to maintain the human rights of both the child and the birth mother. To grant parenthood of a child to any but the birth mother in the first degree would constitute an inappropriate imbalance of power. To set a precedent in which the automatic parental rights could be granted to any but the birth mother would be dangerous to all women in the UK and internationally and would constitute a human rights breach of the highest order. The parental rights must fall initially to the birth mother to protect the integrity of Great Britain's commitment to the human rights of the child and to women. Should the birth mother deem herself unable to care for the child, or the home state to deem her unfit in that instance only should parental rights be contested in law.

12 Consultation Question 5: We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the Family Procedure Rules 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Chapter 8: Legal Parenthood: Proposals for Reform - A New Pathway

14 Consultation Question 7:

No

Please provide your views below:

These proposed changes have clearly been lobbied by those who would seek to be commissioning parents.

The consultation documents references submissions by 'surrogates' via a prior consultation. It is widely known now that this consultation was limited to a narrow population mainly consisting of lobbyists for this reform. There is evidence that these lobbyists populated the answers to this consultation with their own responses. Given that this consultation provided no evidence that the supposed 'surrogates' mentioned in the consultation documents were verified to be actual surrogates in real life, the only supporting claim provided by the consultation that this is beneficial to surrogate mothers cannot be supported. I would strongly advise that the commission be in a position to show that the basis upon which the 'benefits' of the proposed changes can be evidenced to be true before such a major change in law affecting the rights of children and women.

As mentioned in a previous answer, in no event should automatic parenthood be given to any but the birth mother on any occasion. To set the precedent that any but the birth mother can be given automatic parental rights would constitute a breach of the highest order of the human rights of women and children, specifically against the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations.

15 Consultation Question 8:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Any crime that is committed against women and children for the purpose of commissioning a child should be thoroughly documented. This can ensure that any child conceived under such conditions has access to all information pertaining to their birth and hereditary origins.

Another period

Please provide your views below:

Although I strongly oppose the creation of a new pathway, any information collected by illegal practices of surrogacy should be kept. Subsequent generations should have the right to access information of the crimes committed against their ancestors, including non-related birth mothers as this may include information pertaining to disease risk and disability, ancestry and right to knowledge of their cultural ancestry and family origin. As such, records must not be destroyed or made inaccessible to involved parties.

16 Consultation Question 9: We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

This prohibition should be across all cases of intended 'surrogacy'. The practice of egg harvesting for the purpose of surrogacy normalises idea of women's bodies as commodities, 'service providers' and 'places of business', all of which are in violation of the human rights of women. Furthermore, it increases the risk to children where there is no human being directly involved in the creation of the child who is committed in law or practice to care for the child after its birth. This creates a dangerous environment under which children can be created for the purpose of producing 'stock'.

17 Consultation Question 10: We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the normalisation of the practice of surrogacy in the UK.

18 Consultation Question 11:

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

19 Consultation Question 12:

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

21 Consultation Question 14:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

22 Consultation Question 15:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

Yes

Please share your views below:

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

23 Consultation Question 16:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

24 Consultation Question 17: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

25 Consultation Question 18: For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

26 Consultation Question 19:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

Please provide your views below:

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

27 Consultation Question 20:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

28 Consultation Question 21: We invite consultees' views as to: (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

29 Consultation Question 22:

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

30 Consultation Question 23:

Please provide your views below:

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a procurement of a child via 'surrogacy'. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

31 Consultation Question 24:

Please provide your views below:

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

32 Consultation Question 25: We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Please provide your views below:

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all 'surrogacy' (co-erced gestation) arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that commissioning ('intended') parents should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

33 Consultation Question 26:

No

Please provide your views below:

Any child born for the purpose of gift or exchange of goods MUST be viewed as the site of a crime, both against the mother co-erced into the practice and the child produced for this industry. Therefore the commissioning ('intended') parents must be charged with attempted child trafficking. Any allowance for the child to live with those that procured them in violation of human rights would create a climate conducive to child trafficking and exploitation of women and children in Great Britain.

34 Consultation Question 27:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes (if verifiable) alone do not justify a measure that contravenes recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

35 Consultation Question 28: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the 'intended parents' should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women's reproductive capacities.

36 Consultation Question 29:

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Chapter 9: The Regulation of Surrogacy Arrangements

37 Consultation Question 30: We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

38 Consultation Question 31: We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

40 Consultation Question 33:

42 Consultation Question 35: We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as ‘surrogates.’

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

43 Consultation Question 36: We invite consultees’ views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

44 Consultation Question 37: We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the ‘new pathway’. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

45 Consultation Question 37: We invite consultees’ views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the ‘new pathway’. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

46 Consultation Question 38: We invite consultees’ views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

Please provide your views below:

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

47 Consultation Question 39: We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

Please provide your views below:

48 Consultation Question 40: We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms). Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

49 Consultation Question 41: We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

50 Consultation Question 42: We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Chapter 10: Children's Access to Information About Surrogacy Arrangements

51 Consultation Question 43: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

52 Consultation Question 44: We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

53 Consultation Question 45: We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

Please provide your views below:

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

54 Consultation Question 46: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

55 Consultation Question 47:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Not Answered

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

56 Consultation Question 48: We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

Please provide your views below:

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

57 Consultation Question 49:

Other

Please provide your views below:

Information about the child's heritage could give pertinent information about their likelihood of disease risk and genetically inherited disorders. Therefore I do not believe that this information should ever be withheld from them or made inaccessible.

Please provide your views below:

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

58 Consultation Question 50: We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

Please provide your views below:

YES, this should be possible.

61 Consultation Question 53: For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Chapter 11: Eligibility Criteria for a Parental Order

62 Consultation Question 54: We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished. Do consultees agree?

Please provide your views below:

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

63 Consultation Question 55:

No

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Chapter 12: Eligibility Criteria for Both a Parental Order and for the New Pathway

64 Consultation Question 56:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

65 Consultation Question 57:

Please provide your views below:

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

66 Consultation Question 58: We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them. Do consultees agree?

Please provide views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

68 Consultation Question 60: We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order. Do consultees agree?

No

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

69 Consultation Question 61: We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order. Yes

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

72 Consultation Question 64:

No

Please provide your views below:

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

73 Consultation Question 65:

Other

Please provide your views below:

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

78 Consultation Question 70: We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

79 Consultation Question 71: We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway. Do consultees agree?

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Chapter 15: Payments to the Surrogate: Options for Reform

80 Consultation Question 72:

Please provide your views below:

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

87 Consultation Question 79:

Please provide your views below:

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

106 Consultation Question 98: We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood. Do consultees agree?

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

107 Consultation Question 99:

No

Please provide your views below:

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Chapter 17: Miscellaneous Issues

109 Consultation Question 101: We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

110 Consultation Question 102: We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies. Do consultees agree?

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

112 Consultation Question 104: We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

Please provide your views below:

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

113 Consultation Question 105: We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

115 Consultation Question 107:

Please provide your views below:

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself. There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other countries.

Please provide your views below:

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

Please provide your views below:

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

116 Consultation Question 108: We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

Please provide your views below:

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

119 Consultation Question 111: We invite consultees' views as to the impact (social, emotional, financial or otherwise) of the current law where the intended parents are not the legal parents from birth of the child born of the surrogacy arrangement.

Please provide your views below:

As set out numerous times within this response, I believe that the normalising the act of of 'surrogacy' (commissioning children for the purpose of exchange) is a violation of the human rights of children and women. For Great Britain to change from an ethical position of legally opposing such criminal acts against humans to one that openly endorses, and even 'encourages' the practice in the UK would set the UK apart from Switzerland, Austria, Norway, France, Germany, Italy, Spain etc. from condemning this unethical practice. If Great Britain wants to remain a place that is conducive of respect of women and children, it must first not turn them into commodities and create industries for their exploitation. For these reasons I oppose any change in the law to bring acceptance to a practice that is unethical on physical, social, economical and psychological grounds for all parties involved in such human rights violations.

N/A

126 Consultation Question 118: We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this Consultation Paper.

Please provide your views below:

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

- (1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

- (2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

(1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and

(2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration.

Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

- (1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;
- (2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or
- (3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

- (1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,

- (2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and
- (3) met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

- 1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

1.12 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;

- (2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and
- (3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

- (1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;
- (2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and
- (3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

- (1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;
- (2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and
- (3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

- (1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;
- (2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and
- (3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.17 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

- (1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and
- (2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.19 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Paragraph 8.77

Consultation Question 17.

1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

1.21 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

1.22 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

1.23 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

- (1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:
 - (a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and
 - (b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or
- (2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

1.24 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

- (1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;
- (2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and
- (3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.25 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and
- (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.26 We invite consultees' views:

- (1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and
- (2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:

- (a) administrative, or
- (b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.27 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and
- (2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.28 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

- (1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and
- (2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.29 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

- (1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and
- (2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.31 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

- (1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and
- (2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify a measure that contravenes recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.32 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the ‘intended parents’ should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child’s best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women’s reproductive capacities.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.33 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees’ views as to:

- (1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

- (2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.140

Consultation Question 30.

- 1.34 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

- 1.35 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

N/A

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.36 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.37 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.38 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

- (2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

- (3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.39 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

- (1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;
- (2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;
- (3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;
- (4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and
- (5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

LEAVE ALL CHECK BOXES BLANK (i.e. none of the above)

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.40 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.42 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.44 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.45 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.46 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.47 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

- 1.48 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

- 1.49 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

- 1.50 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

- 1.51 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.52 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.53 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.54 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.55 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.56 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.57 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;
- (2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:
 - (a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and
 - (b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and
- (3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

- 1.59 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

- 1.60 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

- (1) where his or her legal parents have consented;
- (2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or
- (3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

- 1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

- 1.62 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.63 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.64 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

- (1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or
- (2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.65 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.66 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.67 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

- (2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:
 - (a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or
 - (b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and
- (3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.68 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.69 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.70 We invite consultees' views on whether:

- (1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or
- (2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

- 1.71 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

- 1.72 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

- (1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but
- (2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

- 1.73 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

- 1.74 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Consultation Question 60.

1.75 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.76 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.77 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

- (1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or
- (2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.79 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.80 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

- (1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or
- (2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.81 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.82 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.83 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood.

I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.84 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.85 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.86 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.87 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.88 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

- (1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and
- (2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.90 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.91 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

- (1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;
- (2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and
- (3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.92 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.94 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

- (1) based on an allowance;
- (2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or
- (3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Consultation Question 76.

1.99 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

- (1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or
- (2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.101 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

- (1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and
- (2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

- (1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;
- (2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or
- (3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.103 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

- (1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or
- (2) left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.105 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

- (1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and
- (2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. (check box)

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

- (1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or
- (2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

- (1) no other payments;
- (2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;
- (3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;
- (4) lost earnings;
- (5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or
- (6) gifts.

Leave all check boxes blank.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.110 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

- (1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;
- (2) to any miscarriage or termination; or
- (3) some other period of time (please specify).

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

1.112 We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Paragraph 15.74

Consultation Question 85.

1.113 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

1.114 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.115 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

- (1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and
- (2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

1.116 We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.117 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

Paragraph 15.99

Consultation Question 89.

1.118 We invite overseas surrogates (or bodies representing or advocating for surrogates) to share with us their experiences of international surrogacy arrangements.

N/A

Paragraph 16.10

Consultation Question 90.

1.119 We invite organisations focused on children's rights and welfare in the international context to share with us their views on our proposed reforms and consultation questions in this chapter.

N/A

Paragraph 16.12

Consultation Question 91.

1.120 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of their experience of applying to register a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement as a British citizen and obtaining a passport for the child. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have about causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 16.53

Consultation Question 93.

1.122 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.68

Consultation Question 94.

1.123 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport before the child is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling

and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

1.124 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.125 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or
- (2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.126 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.127 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

1.128 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.129 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.130 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.131 We provisionally propose that:

1.132 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.133 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.134 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.135 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

- (1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and
- (2) if such a restriction is necessary, there should be a process allowing foreign intended parents to remove the child from the jurisdiction of the UK for this purpose and with the approval of the court and, if so, what form should that process take.

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.137 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and
- (2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself.

There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.144 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.145 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy

arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.146 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

- (1) when the child was born;
- (2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;
- (3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and
- (4) whether they are a:
 - (a) opposite-sex couple;
 - (b) male same-sex couple;
 - (c) female same-sex couple;
 - (d) single woman; or
 - (e) single man.

N/A

Paragraph 18.2

Consultation Question 110.

1.147 We invite consultees who have experience of applying for a parental order in the UK to tell us:

- (1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;
- (2) whether they had legal advice before the making of the parental order;
- (3) whether they were represented by a lawyer in court; and
- (4) the cost of any legal advice or representation.

N/A

Paragraph 18.4

Consultation Question 111.

1.148 We invite consultees' views as to the impact (social, emotional, financial or otherwise) of the current law where the intended parents are not the legal parents from birth of the child born of the surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 18.6

Consultation Question 112.

1.149 We invite consultees to tell us what they have paid for, or to provide evidence about the cost of:

- (1) medical screening; and
- (2) implications counselling

(where possible separating out the cost of such screening, tests or implications counselling from any other costs involved with fertility treatment).

N/A

1.150 We invite legal consultees, who advise on surrogacy and parental order proceedings, to provide evidence of what they would charge:

- (1) to provide advice sufficient to meet the proposed requirement for independent legal advice discussed in Chapter 13; and

- (2) to draft, advise on and negotiate the written surrogacy agreement required for the new pathway.

N/A

Paragraph 18.8

Consultation Question 113.

1.151 We invite consultees to tell us of the impact of:

- (1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and
- (2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:
 - (a) in the new pathway;
 - (b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or
 - (c) in both situations.

Paragraph 18.11

Consultation Question 114.

1.152 We invite consultees who consider that they might be able to fulfil the role of the independent professional discussed in Chapter 9 to tell us:

- (1) their profession; and
- (2) what they would charge to provide such a service.

N/A

Paragraph 18.13

Consultation Question 115.

1.153 We invite consultees who are intended parents to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

- (1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and

- (2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

1.154 We invite consultees who are surrogates to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

- (1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and
- (2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

Paragraph 18.15

Consultation Question 116.

1.155 We ask consultees who are intended parents to tell us:

- (1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;
- (2) what they spent, in total, on the surrogacy arrangement(s) that led to the birth of their child(ren), including the cost of fertility treatment, payments to the surrogate and payments to any surrogacy agency or organisation;
- (3) how they raised the funds for the surrogacy arrangement(s);
- (4) what they spent on any fertility treatment prior to entering into a surrogacy arrangement (where that treatment did not lead to the birth of a child); and
- (5) how they raised the funds for the fertility treatment.

N/A

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.156 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.157 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Chapter 6: The parental order procedure

8 Consultation Question 1:

Other

Please provide your views below:

International surrogacy arrangements should be discouraged. The exploitation of women in other jurisdictions is against public policy in those jurisdictions and in ours.

Furthermore, the cost of such arrangements should not fall on taxpayers in the UK and the costs of representation for the child should be paid by those seeking orders in their favour.

However, I agree that where such arrangements do take place, under no circumstances should the process be considered suitable for consideration by a lower court.

Please provide your views below:

No. International surrogacy arrangements should be strongly discouraged and where people continue to indulge in them, they should come before the High Court.

It is quite clear that Orders regarding a person's parenthood are of the utmost significance to that person and should be heard at High Court level at the least

9 Consultation Question 2:

Please provide your views below:

This question is not appropriate for a consultation which is open to the public. It is quite clear that Orders regarding a person's parenthood are of the utmost significance to that person and should be heard at High Court level at the least

10 Consultation Question 3: We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Please provide your views below:

11 Consultation Question 4:

Other

Please provide your views below:

The whole premise of this consultation is misconceived and wrong and the consultation paper should be withdrawn. You have started from the position that because surrogacy occurs in the UK, there is desirability for the 'market' in human life to be better regulated. You should have considered the issue as a whole and in particular whether the ban on all forms of surrogacy that was enacted in Sweden in 2016 and Spain in 2018 could provide a model for reform and not just the systems operating in jurisdictions where women's rights are lagging behind those of other countries, such as India and Thailand.

12 Consultation Question 5: We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the Family Procedure Rules 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise. Do consultees agree?

Chapter 8: Legal Parenthood: Proposals for Reform - A New Pathway

14 Consultation Question 7:

No

Please provide your views below:

It is absolutely crucial that individuals are not able to contract out of such a fundamental pillar of our law. A child's mother is and always should be in law, the person that gave birth to her or him. It is abhorrent to even consider that a woman could be delivered of a child that she has carried through pregnancy, and not automatically be recognised in law as the mother of that child.

You appear not to have considered the wider societal impact of making such a radical change, apparently in consideration of a tiny number of people who want their private contractual arrangements for the acquisition of a human being to be more convenient for them. This is despite the fact that your consultation paper acknowledges that the UN Special Rapporteur recommends the opposite and that parental responsibility should always be vested in the woman giving birth.

15 Consultation Question 8:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

The way the question is framed makes it impossible to answer in the way I wish to. I fundamentally disagree with the proposed new pathway and thus that 'regulated surrogacy organisations' should be party to them.

However, it is of course of the utmost importance that records of such arrangements are maintained accurately, over a number of years, so that all children born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement, will be able to access details about it.

Another period

Please provide your views below:

No time limit, the same as for birth and death registers

16 Consultation Question 9: We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

17 Consultation Question 10: We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

I fundamentally and profoundly disagree with your 'new pathway' and urge you to consider the responses to this consultation from the standpoint that the 'new pathway' may not be the right approach for the UK and in fact should be scrapped.

The consultation breaches the Nolan principles, and you did not take views from enough people to satisfy the public that the 'demand for change' exists and even if it does, should be met.

18 Consultation Question 11:

No

Please provide your views below:

Again, the framing of the question makes it impossible to answer fully and properly by indicating yes or no. However, I have answered no because I fundamentally, profoundly disagree with any proposal that requires a post partum woman, who is likely to have had a caesarean section, and will be experiencing sustained emotional upheaval as her body adjusts to the fact that her pregnancy has ended but she has no baby to care for, should be forced to make such a critical decision under pressure of time.

Given the additional risks posed to a pregnant woman in gestating an embryo which was not made with her own eggs, she may not be well enough to be in a position to make decisions with life long ramifications for her and the child she has given birth to, which whether or not she is genetically related to, is flesh of her flesh and blood of her blood. I am appalled at the way you propose to detach the women who give birth in this way from the babies that they have grown and nurtured.

19 Consultation Question 12:

Other

Please provide your views below:

All surrogate mothers should remain legally the mother of the child they give birth to until the Court makes an Order otherwise

20 Consultation Question 13:

No

Please provide your views below:

Again, a three part question, badly worded, to which a yes or no answer isn't really possible. As I progress through the questions, I am increasingly concerned with the viability of this consultation as a means of gathering information from the general public. I am a lawyer and the questions are difficult to read, difficult to answer and refer to a 502 page document. It's wholly inappropriate.

The questions should offer the option to reply on the basis that one fundamentally, profoundly disagrees with your proposed new pathway.

For the avoidance of doubt, it should NEVER be the business of the people commissioning the gestation of a child by a woman, to comment on that woman's capacity to make decisions about her pregnancy and parenthood of the child she delivers.

The total lack of acknowledgement by you in the paper and in these questions, of the huge and obvious potential for women to be exploited by a surrogacy arrangement, is truly baffling

21 Consultation Question 14:

Not Answered

Please provide your views below:

The Special Rapporteur's also recommended that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration.

A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. The type of people who will potentially take advantage of a woman of lower socio economic status, to pay for her reproductive labour and to make her child the subject of a transaction, without any obligation to consider the physical and emotional effects on her, are not 'regular' parents and should be subject to scrutiny. The horrific behaviour of the commissioning parents in Re Z [2016] EWFC 34 is a case in point.

24 Consultation Question 17: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth. Do consultees agree?

No

25 Consultation Question 18: For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

Please provide your views below:

Good grief. A woman has died as a result of undertaking a risky physical process and you seem to be suggesting that it would be wrong in some way to hand her child over - the transaction must be completed even if things go catastrophically wrong for her, her family, her spouse, her other children? My views are that this is abhorrent and any widening of surrogacy as a practice simply normalises the devaluing of motherhood, and strips the surrogate mother of her dignity, autonomy and integrity.

Absolutely horrific question. The fact you even have to ask it should give you serious pause for thought about what you are proposing here

28 Consultation Question 21: We invite consultees' views as to: (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.

29 Consultation Question 22:

30 Consultation Question 23:

Please provide your views below:

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

32 Consultation Question 25: We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Please provide your views below:

No, they should not be able to apply for an Order without leave.

Surrogacy is an exploitative process with potential for huge abuses and for lasting trauma to the mother and child. It is absolutely appropriate and desirable for those who wish to enter into a contractual arrangement that places another human being at significant risk of physical and emotional harm, to be scrutinised by the Court

33 Consultation Question 26:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with this proposal.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur, in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

34 Consultation Question 27:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly and vehemently disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur, in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

35 Consultation Question 28: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the 'intended parents' should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women's reproductive capacities.

36 Consultation Question 29:

Please provide your views below:

No it would not be appropriate to start putting limits on what 'parental responsibility' means, as your question clearly refers to the birth mother of the child being prevented from having the same rights as any other mother with parental responsibility, simply because the commissioning parties want her to contract out of them. For their benefit, not hers or the child's.
Many parents do not live with their child but still have full parental responsibility. The birth mother's PR should only end with her freely given consent and by subsequent Order of the Court

Chapter 9: The Regulation of Surrogacy Arrangements

37 Consultation Question 30: We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway. Do consultees agree?

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly and vehemently disagree with widening and normalising the practice of surrogacy in this country due to the human rights concerns it presents, and the ongoing potential for women to be exploited and physically and psychologically harmed by taking part in it, and for babies to be trafficked or born by surrogacy so that the commissioning parties could avoid the safeguarding checks they would be required to undergo if they were adopting 38 Consultation Question 31: We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

No

Please provide your views below:

What kind of organisation could ever be trusted to 'regulate' contracts by which human beings are bought and sold?

Will this organisation carry out due diligence on surrogates to ensure that they are not vulnerable, and being coerced into carrying out reproductive labour for others?

We should not be normalising this process, and I have deep misgivings about your approach to it. The fact that there is a market for women's reproductive labour absolutely does not mean we have to acknowledge the existence of the market, and facilitate it. There is no right to be a parent. However, living women have the right to be viewed as fully human and not just a 'host'. The absence of any empathy for women in your consultation paper is so disappointing, and very, very concerning

Not Answered

Please provide your views below:

I object to the principle of a 'surrogacy organisation' and to any 'regulation' which normalises the exploitation inherent in surrogacy.

Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Yes - unless we're bringing Solomon back to carve babies up and give half to each party to the contract...

A contract involving a human life should not be enforceable

49 Consultation Question 41: We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution. The inside of a woman's body is not a workplace.

Commercial surrogacy is abhorrent in principle. That someone should profit from procuring a pregnancy and transferring 'ownership' of the resulting baby, is repugnant.

50 Consultation Question 42: We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

Ads offering a full refund if the foetus dies before 24 weeks gestation ? Are you serious? This is a hideous, chilling, suggestion. You are the LAW COMMISSION for goodness sake. We weren't even allowed to advertise legal services until 10 years ago!

Chapter 10: Children's Access to Information About Surrogacy Arrangements

51 Consultation Question 43: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18. Do consultees agree?

Please provide your views below:

52 Consultation Question 44: We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement. I oppose any system in which the woman who gave birth to the child is excised or expunged from the public record as having done so.

53 Consultation Question 45: We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

Please provide your views below:

I do not consider the birth registration system needs reform. I am opposed to changes to allow three parents to be registered. Commissioning parties need to get real about this - the woman who carries the child and gives birth to it is hugely significant and the fact of her involvement should be a matter of public record.

I am vehemently opposed to any dilution of the concept of the mother of a child being the woman who gave birth to that child, whatever private arrangements people enter into, and whatever private struggles they may have had which brought them to surrogacy, are not in any way a valid reason for eroding the status and rights of woman as mothers of the children they gestate and deliver

54 Consultation Question 46: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings. Do consultees agree?

Of course every child should have access to information about their birth and their parentage. The courts have recognised the importance of this not least because a child should have the right to knowledge about their genetic background

64 Consultation Question 56:

Other

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with your 'new pathway' and with any expansion or normalisation of surrogacy, something which the European Parliament recognises has condemned in its annual report of 2014. The section on "Rights of woman and girls", sub paragraph 114 states that the EP:

"Condemns the practice of surrogacy, which undermines the human dignity of the woman since her body and its reproductive functions are used as a commodity; considers that the practice of gestational surrogacy which involves reproductive exploitation and use of the human body for financial or other gain, in particular in the case of vulnerable women in developing countries, shall be prohibited and treated as a matter of urgency in human rights instruments"

Inevitably, if you allow a surrogacy market here (which despite your response to my FOI request denying that you were proposing commercial surrogacy, is what you are proposing), then tourists from all over the world will flock here instead and poor, vulnerable women will be trafficked in to meet demand.

Please provide your views below:

The presence of this question makes it clear that you are well aware that a market for surrogacy tourism will inevitably follow the opening up and regulation of the market for commercial reasons.

How can it be that the Law Commission would want to proceed with reforms which will put women and children at risk of exploitation, abuse, physical harm (including death), emotional trauma; and which the European Parliament acknowledges is a serious human rights issue??

Please provide views below:

I disagree with your proposed new pathway. I note this is another question which implicitly acknowledges the grave danger of children being born to be trafficked to another household or 'parents' who might not be awarded parental responsibility by the Court, for many reasons including safeguarding.

There is no need for these aspects to be considered. The consultation paper is flawed in not explaining properly how and why the calls for reform have emerged and how and why it was decided that the market needed to be regulated in existence instead of legislated OUT of existence

Of course there should be a maximum number of pregnancies, or you know very well what will happen - vulnerable women will be coerced into undertaking multiple pregnancies and will be at greatly increased risk of death, or serious physical harm, and/or serious emotional harm

it's almost like you haven't thought AT ALL about the effects on a woman's body (and mental state) of pregnancy and birth. It is shocking, the total lack of empathy for the women without whom this process could not exist.

Chapter 15: Payments to the Surrogate: Options for Reform

80 Consultation Question 72:

Please provide your views below:

I'm certainly not in favour of your proposal that she would end up with less than minimum wage. Payment should be a reasonable hourly rate (£50) to reflect the risk and discomfort, and should be for every single hour of the pregnancy, plus all expenses and should continue during the fourth trimester, when the mother will be recovering from surgery

However, because that would require a well deserved payment of over £430k, I can't see you going for that somehow.

The problem with a market in women's reproductive labour (where you propose teenagers should be able to embark on a long career of repeated dangerous pregnancies), is that if you pay too much, women suffer. If you pay too little, women suffer. If you don't pay at all, women suffer. It just depends at whose hands.

Perhaps we should just reconsider your whole pathway and whether or not we want a market in human life underpinned by unhappy women? Yes i know you can point to a few outliers who say they had no emotional financial or physical pressures and it was all great being a surrogate but i would like to suggest that those women shouldn't necessarily be the benchmark for establishing whether women as a whole in England and Wales will be damaged by this becoming an established industry.

See above - the surrogate mother would deserve a hell of a lot more cash for her labour than 99% of commissioning parties could afford.

So perhaps buying this labour is not something we as a society should be encouraging. The essence of our human dignity is that we are not commodities

Why haven't you asked any questions of women who have been surrogate mothers and had a bad experience. There are many stories i have read alongside reading the consultation paper, where they are not reflected - although when you do note the life changing consequences e.g. for women in India who are shunned by their village, your cavalier attitude to them is distressing.

Your questions in this section are completely slanted to sympathise with 'intended parents' and not with women who have undergone this hugely emotionally and physically draining process.

Again, I will write to you about this separately.

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

- (1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

- (2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

- (1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and
- (2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

- 1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

- 1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

- 1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

- 1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

- (1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;
- (2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or
- (3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

- 1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

- (1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,
- (2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and
- (3) met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

- 1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

- 1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

- 1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

- 1.12 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;
- (2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and
- (3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

- (1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;
- (2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and
- (3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. * <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

- (1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;
- (2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and
- (3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

- (1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;
- (2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and
- (3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.17 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

- (1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and
- (2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.19 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Consultation Question 17.

- 1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

- 1.21 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

1.22 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

1.23 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

- (1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:
 - (a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and
 - (b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or
- (2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

1.24 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

- (1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;
- (2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and
- (3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.25 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and
- (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.26 We invite consultees' views:

- (1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and
- (2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:

- (a) administrative, or
- (b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.27 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and
- (2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.28 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

- (1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and
- (2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.29 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

- (1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and
- (2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.31 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

- (1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and
- (2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify a measure that contravenes recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.32 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the ‘intended parents’ should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child’s best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women’s reproductive capacities.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.33 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees’ views as to:

- (1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

- (2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.140

Consultation Question 30.

- 1.34 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

- 1.35 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

N/A

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.36 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.37 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.38 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

- (2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

- (3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.39 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

- (1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;
- (2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;
- (3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;
- (4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and
- (5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.40 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.42 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.44 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.45 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.46 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.47 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

1.48 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

1.49 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

1.50 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

1.51 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.52 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.53 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.54 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.55 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.56 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.57 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;
- (2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:
 - (a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and
 - (b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and
- (3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

- 1.59 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

- 1.60 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

- (1) where his or her legal parents have consented;
- (2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or
- (3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

- 1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

- 1.62 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.63 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.64 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

- (1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or
- (2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.65 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.66 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.67 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

- (2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:
 - (a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or
 - (b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and
- (3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.68 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.69 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.70 We invite consultees' views on whether:

- (1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or
- (2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

1.71 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

1.72 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

- (1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but
- (2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.73 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

1.74 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Consultation Question 60.

1.75 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.76 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.77 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

- (1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or
- (2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.79 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.80 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

- (1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or
- (2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.81 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.82 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.83 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood.

I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.84 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.85 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.86 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.87 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.88 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

- (1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and
- (2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.90 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.91 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

- (1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;
- (2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and
- (3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.92 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.94 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

- (1) based on an allowance;
- (2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or
- (3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Consultation Question 76.

1.99 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

- (1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or
- (2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.101 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

- (1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and
- (2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

- (1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;
- (2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or
- (3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.103 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

- (1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or
- (2) left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.105 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

- (1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and
- (2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. (check box)

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

- (1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or
- (2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

- (1) no other payments;
- (2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;
- (3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;
- (4) lost earnings;
- (5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or
- (6) gifts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to make any type of fee or payment to the birth mother for her 'services'.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.110 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

- (1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;
- (2) to any miscarriage or termination; or
- (3) some other period of time (please specify).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

1.112 We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Paragraph 15.74

Consultation Question 85.

1.113 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

1.114 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.115 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

- (1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and
- (2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

1.116 We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.117 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

Paragraph 15.99

Consultation Question 89.

1.118 We invite overseas surrogates (or bodies representing or advocating for surrogates) to share with us their experiences of international surrogacy arrangements.

N/A

Paragraph 16.10

Consultation Question 90.

1.119 We invite organisations focused on children's rights and welfare in the international context to share with us their views on our proposed reforms and consultation questions in this chapter.

N/A

Paragraph 16.12

Consultation Question 91.

1.120 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of their experience of applying to register a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement as a British citizen and obtaining a passport for the child. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have about causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the ‘intended parents’ to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur’s recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 16.53

Consultation Question 93.

1.122 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.68

Consultation Question 94.

1.123 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child’s country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the ‘intended parents’ to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport before the child is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur’s recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling

and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

1.124 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.125 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or
- (2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.126 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.127 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

1.128 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.129 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.130 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.131 We provisionally propose that:

1.132 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.133 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.134 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.135 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

- (1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and
- (2) if such a restriction is necessary, there should be a process allowing foreign intended parents to remove the child from the jurisdiction of the UK for this purpose and with the approval of the court and, if so, what form should that process take.

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.137 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and
- (2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself.

There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.144 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.145 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy

arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.146 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

- (1) when the child was born;
- (2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;
- (3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and
- (4) whether they are a:
 - (a) opposite-sex couple;
 - (b) male same-sex couple;
 - (c) female same-sex couple;
 - (d) single woman; or
 - (e) single man.

N/A

Paragraph 18.2

Consultation Question 110.

1.147 We invite consultees who have experience of applying for a parental order in the UK to tell us:

- (1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;
- (2) whether they had legal advice before the making of the parental order;
- (3) whether they were represented by a lawyer in court; and
- (4) the cost of any legal advice or representation.

N/A

Paragraph 18.4

Consultation Question 111.

1.148 We invite consultees' views as to the impact (social, emotional, financial or otherwise) of the current law where the intended parents are not the legal parents from birth of the child born of the surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 18.6

Consultation Question 112.

1.149 We invite consultees to tell us what they have paid for, or to provide evidence about the cost of:

- (1) medical screening; and
- (2) implications counselling

(where possible separating out the cost of such screening, tests or implications counselling from any other costs involved with fertility treatment).

N/A

1.150 We invite legal consultees, who advise on surrogacy and parental order proceedings, to provide evidence of what they would charge:

- (1) to provide advice sufficient to meet the proposed requirement for independent legal advice discussed in Chapter 13; and

- (2) to draft, advise on and negotiate the written surrogacy agreement required for the new pathway.

N/A

Paragraph 18.8

Consultation Question 113.

1.151 We invite consultees to tell us of the impact of:

- (1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and
- (2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:
 - (a) in the new pathway;
 - (b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or
 - (c) in both situations.

Paragraph 18.11

Consultation Question 114.

1.152 We invite consultees who consider that they might be able to fulfil the role of the independent professional discussed in Chapter 9 to tell us:

- (1) their profession; and
- (2) what they would charge to provide such a service.

N/A

Paragraph 18.13

Consultation Question 115.

1.153 We invite consultees who are intended parents to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

- (1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and

- (2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

1.154 We invite consultees who are surrogates to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

- (1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and
- (2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

Paragraph 18.15

Consultation Question 116.

1.155 We ask consultees who are intended parents to tell us:

- (1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;
- (2) what they spent, in total, on the surrogacy arrangement(s) that led to the birth of their child(ren), including the cost of fertility treatment, payments to the surrogate and payments to any surrogacy agency or organisation;
- (3) how they raised the funds for the surrogacy arrangement(s);
- (4) what they spent on any fertility treatment prior to entering into a surrogacy arrangement (where that treatment did not lead to the birth of a child); and
- (5) how they raised the funds for the fertility treatment.

N/A

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.156 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.157 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Chapter 6: The parental order procedure

8 Consultation Question 1:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Judges at lower levels of the judiciary in my experience do not have the knowledge/training/experience to deal with these cases in a streamlined manner. For example, in one case I had some loose involvement with (a UK arrangement) the intended parents ended up having four hearings before a Circuit Judge, the surrogate was ordered to do a full statement and attend all court hearings which was simply not necessary for what was a straightforward arrangement.

Please provide your views below:

If this is the view of the Commission, thought needs to be given to training circuit judges appropriately. The other issue is availability, in my local area circuit judges are listing cases months in advance and this is not helpful for intended parents.

9 Consultation Question 2:

Please provide your views below:

I think the magistrates can continue to hear domestic surrogacy cases, although as above, better training would be helpful.

10 Consultation Question 3: We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Please provide your views below:

11 Consultation Question 4:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Yes, I think this would offer intended parents peace of mind in those early months and also recognise the reality of the situation which is that ultimately the intended parents are the people looking after the baby on a day to day basis.

12 Consultation Question 5: We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the Family Procedure Rules 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Completely agree.

Chapter 8: Legal Parenthood: Proposals for Reform - A New Pathway

14 Consultation Question 7:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

15 Consultation Question 8:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Although I do believe thought needs to be given to what happens is surrogacy organisations fold and no longer exist. Should there be a central database kept with the HFEA for example.

Another period

Please provide your views below:

100 years feels too long, although is helpful when looking back at heritage. I wonder if 50 years would be more realistic/appropriate.

16 Consultation Question 9: We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

While this may frustrate some intended parents, I feel the interests of the child need to be put first which is that openness and honesty is the best policy when it comes to donor conception.

17 Consultation Question 10: We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

I believe it should prevent it, and they will then have to apply for a parental order in the standard way instead.

18 Consultation Question 11:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

I agree. My initial thoughts on this were that I didn't think the surrogate should have a right to object but having heard the reasoning behind this at the consultation event I attended, I think that it is suitable to have a period of time for her to object. If she does object, then the parents should make an application for a parental order to the Courts and the Court can then consider whether to dispense with her agreement (as per the proposals). I think this is suitable and appropriate as it means in circumstances where a surrogate objects for perhaps more petty reasons, the Court can identify this and consider what is in the best interests of the child.

19 Consultation Question 12:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

As above.

20 Consultation Question 13:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

21 Consultation Question 14:

Other

Please provide your views below:

I'm not sure the surrogacy organisation can be responsible for this, I'm just not sure how this would work in practice having seen the workings of an organisation in my previous role and where that would fit, but I feel this instead feels appropriately carried out by the regulated clinic. If there are concerns at all, I wonder if it should then fall out the pathway and a PO needs to be applied for in which CAFCASS can do a report as is the way at the moment.

22 Consultation Question 15:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

This is one point everyone seems to be at one on, that the surrogates partner should never be recognised.

No

Please share your views below:

23 Consultation Question 16:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

I think this is really important as in these worst case scenarios, there is even more need of a structured and clear legal position so everyone knows where they stand, and in these circumstances I think it is important that the IP's are recognised as the legal parents and not the surrogate.

Yes

Please provide your views below:

24 Consultation Question 17: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

25 Consultation Question 18: For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

Please provide your views below:

I think a parental order would need to be made.

26 Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

This will ease matters for the IP's family and will mean it is more straightforward for guardians to be appointed etc.

28 Consultation Question 21: We invite consultees' views as to: (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

Please provide your views below:

I don't think there should be a three-parent model, I think it needs to be the intended parents alone.

45 Consultation Question 37: We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

46 Consultation Question 38: We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

Please provide your views below:

47 Consultation Question 39: We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

I think this is essential.

Please provide your views below:

48 Consultation Question 40: We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms). Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Other than the financial side of things.

49 Consultation Question 41: We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Chapter 10: Children's Access to Information About Surrogacy Arrangements

51 Consultation Question 43: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

52 Consultation Question 44: We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I have lots of IP's who are concerned about this due to religious reasons and because while they are keen to tell their child they do not want wider family to be aware.

53 Consultation Question 45: We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

Please provide your views below:

54 Consultation Question 46: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings. Do consultees agree?

62 Consultation Question 54: We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished. Do consultees agree?

Please provide your views below:

Agreed. Although I think there should be guidance which encourages IP's to apply as soon as possible.

65 Consultation Question 57:

Please provide your views below:

I don't think this area needs to be reformed, I think the existing position fits in 99% of cases.

66 Consultation Question 58: We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide views below:

Important for safeguarding.

67 Consultation Question 59:

Yes

Please provide views below:

Please provide views below:

I think it should be permitted. Clinics can consider whether they would treat by way of their ethics committee etc. and so I think the restriction can be lifted and double donation should be allowed in both cases (although not international cases).

Yes

Please provide views below:

68 Consultation Question 60: We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

69 Consultation Question 61: We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide views below:

70 Consultation Question 62:

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with this. There are circumstances in which carrying a child is simply not possible, for reasons other than medical necessity and so I do not feel a restriction should be placed on this. Ultimately people who are doing it out of pure convenience alone won't be able to access surrogacy because surrogates won't want to work with them.

Please provide your views below:

The difficulty in doing this is one of the reasons I don't think this should be introduced. There are various reasons, mental and physical, and I feel defining/assessing these feels too involved/controlling.

78 Consultation Question 70: We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

No - a woman may simply decide not to have a child, but that doesn't mean she wouldn't be a brilliant surrogate.

79 Consultation Question 71: We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

This will be governed in any event by doctors/hospitals and their guidance to women.

98 Consultation Question 90: We invite organisations focused on children's rights and welfare in the international context to share with us their views on our proposed reforms and consultation questions in this chapter.

Please provide your views below:

99 Consultation Question 91: We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of their experience of applying to register a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement as a British citizen and obtaining a passport for the child. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have about causes of delays in the process.

Please provide your views below:

I regularly used to do this in my previous role, and my experience was always that it was lengthy and painful. A huge number of documents were required by the Home Office/Passport Office, but often additional documents would be requested for no reason. It often seemed to be down to luck as to who received your application. The Home Office were significantly quicker than the Passport Office but this was because there appeared to be a designated team of 2 people at the time who regularly dealt with surrogacy cases and so I marked all my applications for their attention. The Passport Office was sporadic, sometimes (particularly in US cases) we could receive the passport within a few weeks, sometimes in others (such as Ukraine/Georgia and previously India) it took weeks with random, additional documents being requested and no reason/explanation given. It is incredibly stressful for IP's who just want to get home/do things in the right way.

100 Consultation Question 92: We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

I agree, but the crucial thing is going to be providing training to the Home Office/Passport Office so they understand these applications and know how to deal with them. Provided this is done, there may be no need for a file to be opened prior (although this does seem very sensible.).

101 Consultation Question 93: We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. Please provide your views below:

Generally after having received advice I have found that foreign IP's choose not to use the UK as a destination for surrogacy as the surrogate would not be happy remaining the legal mother as they are not eligible for a parental order. I don't think we want to make the UK a destination for surrogacy in any event.

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

- (1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

- (2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

- (1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and
- (2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Consultation Question 3.

- 1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

- 1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

- 1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

- 1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

- (1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;
- (2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or
- (3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

- 1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

- (1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,
- (2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and
- (3) met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

1.12 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;
- (2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and
- (3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the ‘intended parents’ should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur’s recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child’s best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

- (1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;
- (2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and
- (3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the ‘new pathway’ – particularly with the ‘intended parents’ acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

- (1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;
- (2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and
- (3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

- (1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;
- (2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and
- (3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.17 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

- (1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and
- (2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.19 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Paragraph 8.77

Consultation Question 17.

- 1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

- 1.21 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

- 1.22 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

- 1.23 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

- (1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:
 - (a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and
 - (b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or
- (2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

- 1.24 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

- (1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;

- (2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and
- (3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.25 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and
- (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.26 We invite consultees' views:

- (1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and
- (2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:
 - (a) administrative, or

(b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.27 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and
- (2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.28 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

- (1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and
- (2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.29 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

- (1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and
- (2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.31 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

- (1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and
- (2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.32 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the ‘intended parents’ should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child’s best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women’s reproductive capacities.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.33 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees’ views as to:

- (1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and
- (2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the ‘new pathway’. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.140

Consultation Question 30.

1.34 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

1.35 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.36 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.37 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.38 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

- (2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

- (3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.39 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

- (1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;
- (2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;
- (3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;
- (4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and
- (5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

None of the above

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.40 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.42 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.44 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

- 1.45 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

- 1.46 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

- 1.47 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

- 1.48 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Consultation Question 40.

1.49 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

1.50 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women’s prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

1.51 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other ‘service’ organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

- 1.52 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

- 1.53 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.54 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.55 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.56 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.57 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;
- (2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:

- (a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and
 - (b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and
- (3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

- 1.59 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

- 1.60 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

- (1) where his or her legal parents have consented;
- (2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or
- (3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

- 1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

- 1.62 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.63 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.64 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

- (1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or
- (2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.65 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.66 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.67 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

- (2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:
 - (a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or
 - (b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and
- (3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.68 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.69 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.70 We invite consultees' views on whether:

- (1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or
- (2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

1.71 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

1.72 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

- (1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but
- (2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.73 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

1.74 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Consultation Question 60.

- 1.75 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.' No one has the right to 'obtain' another human's life. Surrogacy is no more a 'right' of an individual than adoption. Children should not be made into commodities; neither should women's wombs be commodified into spaces for rent.

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

- 1.76 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.' Surrogacy is no more a 'right' of an individual than adoption or sex. No one has the right to demand the ownership of another human being. Children should not be made into commodities; neither should women's wombs be commodified into spaces for rent.

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.77 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

- (1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or
- (2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.' Surrogacy is no more a 'right' of an individual than adoption (no one should be allowed to demand to adopt either). The rights of the child must remain paramount. Children should not be made into commodities; neither should women's wombs be commodified into spaces for rent.

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.' Surrogacy is no more a 'right' of an individual than adoption (no one should be allowed to demand to adopt either). The rights of the child must remain paramount. Children should not be made into commodities; neither should women's wombs be commodified into spaces for rent.

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.79 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.80 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

- (1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or

- (2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

- 1.81 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

- 1.82 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

- 1.83 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.84 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.85 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.86 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for a 'new pathway'. At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.87 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.88 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

- (1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and
- (2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.90 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.91 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

- (1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;
- (2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and
- (3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.92 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.94 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

- (1) based on an allowance;
- (2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or
- (3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Consultation Question 76.

1.99 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

- (1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or
- (2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.101 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

- (1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and
- (2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

- (1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;
- (2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or
- (3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother compensation.

1.103 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother compensation.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

- (1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or
- (2) left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother compensation.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.105 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

- (1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and
- (2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

- (1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or
- (2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Neither of the above.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

- (1) no other payments;
- (2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;
- (3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;
- (4) lost earnings;
- (5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or
- (6) gifts.

None of the above.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to make any type of fee or payment to the birth mother for her 'services'.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.110 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

- (1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;

- (2) to any miscarriage or termination; or
- (3) some other period of time (please specify).

None of the above.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

1.112 We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Consultation Question 85.

1.113 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

1.114 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.115 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

- (1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and
- (2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

1.116 We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.117 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent. It highlights how the pregnant women are made into slaves, coerced to restricting themselves to the whims of their owners.

Paragraph 15.99

Consultation Question 89.

1.118 We invite overseas surrogates (or bodies representing or advocating for surrogates) to share with us their experiences of international surrogacy arrangements.

N/A

Paragraph 16.10

Consultation Question 90.

1.119 We invite organisations focused on children's rights and welfare in the international context to share with us their views on our proposed reforms and consultation questions in this chapter.

N/A

Paragraph 16.12

Consultation Question 91.

1.120 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of their experience of applying to register a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement as a British citizen and obtaining a passport for the child. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have about causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 16.53

Consultation Question 93.

1.122 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.68

Consultation Question 94.

1.123 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport before the child is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

1.124 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.125 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or

(2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.126 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.127 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

1.128 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.129 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.130 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.131 We provisionally propose that:

1.132 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.133 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.134 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.135 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

- (1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and
- (2) if such a restriction is necessary, there should be a process allowing foreign intended parents to remove the child from the jurisdiction of the UK for this purpose and with the approval of the court and, if so, what form should that process take.

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.137 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and
- (2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with the wishes of the pregnant women as their patient. From the point of view of health and care professionals the desires of the people, who want to subsequently adopt the baby, are irrelevant throughout the pregnancy, birth and post-natal care, and this would continue until a time that the legal process of adoption was complete.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Guidance should therefore be given to health and care professionals to recognise this form of abuse and how the professionals should respond, including guidance as to whom they should make a referral to protect the pregnant woman from ongoing coercive control. (It would obviously also be necessary to ensure that those working in the criminal justice system are similarly aware.)

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. There is no evidence to show that this could be different for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered by the authors of the consultation questions; there are no questions about this important issue.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself. There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Guidance should therefore be given to health and care professionals to recognise this form of abuse and how the professionals should respond, including guidance as to whom they should make a referral to protect the pregnant woman from ongoing coercive control. (It would obviously also be necessary to ensure that those working in the criminal justice system are similarly aware.)

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.144 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.145 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by 'partners' and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.146 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

- (1) when the child was born;
- (2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;
- (3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and
- (4) whether they are a:
 - (a) opposite-sex couple;
 - (b) male same-sex couple;
 - (c) female same-sex couple;
 - (d) single woman; or
 - (e) single man.

N/A

Paragraph 18.2

Consultation Question 110.

1.147 We invite consultees who have experience of applying for a parental order in the UK to tell us:

- (1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;
- (2) whether they had legal advice before the making of the parental order;
- (3) whether they were represented by a lawyer in court; and
- (4) the cost of any legal advice or representation.

N/A

Paragraph 18.4

Consultation Question 111.

1.148 We invite consultees' views as to the impact (social, emotional, financial or otherwise) of the current law where the intended parents are not the legal parents from birth of the child born of the surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 18.6

Consultation Question 112.

1.149 We invite consultees to tell us what they have paid for, or to provide evidence about the cost of:

- (1) medical screening; and
- (2) implications counselling

(where possible separating out the cost of such screening, tests or implications counselling from any other costs involved with fertility treatment).

N/A

1.150 We invite legal consultees, who advise on surrogacy and parental order proceedings, to provide evidence of what they would charge:

- (1) to provide advice sufficient to meet the proposed requirement for independent legal advice discussed in Chapter 13; and
- (2) to draft, advise on and negotiate the written surrogacy agreement required for the new pathway.

N/A

Paragraph 18.8

Consultation Question 113.

1.151 We invite consultees to tell us of the impact of:

- (1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and
- (2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:
 - (a) in the new pathway;
 - (b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or

(c) in both situations.

Paragraph 18.11

Consultation Question 114.

1.152 We invite consultees who consider that they might be able to fulfil the role of the independent professional discussed in Chapter 9 to tell us:

- (1) their profession; and
- (2) what they would charge to provide such a service.

N/A

Paragraph 18.13

Consultation Question 115.

1.153 We invite consultees who are intended parents to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

- (1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and
- (2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

1.154 We invite consultees who are surrogates to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

- (1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and
- (2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

Paragraph 18.15

Consultation Question 116.

1.155 We ask consultees who are intended parents to tell us:

- (1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;
- (2) what they spent, in total, on the surrogacy arrangement(s) that led to the birth of their child(ren), including the cost of fertility treatment, payments to the surrogate and payments to any surrogacy agency or organisation;
- (3) how they raised the funds for the surrogacy arrangement(s);
- (4) what they spent on any fertility treatment prior to entering into a surrogacy arrangement (where that treatment did not lead to the birth of a child); and
- (5) how they raised the funds for the fertility treatment.

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.156 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.157 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy should therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is (deliberately?) confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Chapter 6: The parental order procedure

8 Consultation Question 1:

No

Please provide your views below:

Having experienced such a judgment before the High Court, my wife and I believe that the process is simply not justified on a mandatory basis. If the other proposals in this consultation were adopted, particularly relating to safeguards, we believe the judgment could readily be handled at a lower level of the judiciary.

In simplistic terms, the current requirements tie up the time of high-court judges which could be better used.

Furthermore, the current requirements impose the need to retain a barrister, together with an extremely detailed level of preparation of case law and documentation. Legal support costs and the need to present in London make this a financially taxing obligation.

We do believe, however, that revised legislation should retain provisions for cases to be elevated to the High Court if lower levels of the judiciary are unable to reach a decision for whatever reason.

Finally, we would observe that our own experience before the High Court was actually a pleasant and highly emotional family occasion, thanks to the preparation of our legal team and the evident pleasure of the (female) High Court judge in awarding our parental order.

Please provide your views below:

This would seem to be a sensible approach, provided adequate guidance is provided to said judges.

14 Consultation Question 7:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

My wife and I would strongly support this approach, in the hope that it stimulates more potential surrogates to come forward and normalises the subject. The proposals appear very sensible.

Significant factors in our decision to pursue surrogacy overseas were a) the very small number of organisations assisting with surrogacy at the time and the associated small pool of surrogates, and b) the perception that surrogacy in the UK appeared to be an almost secretive activity - "don't speak the word too loudly".

16 Consultation Question 9: We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

The reason for such a prohibition remains unclear. My wife and I believe that intended parents and surrogates should be able to make their own decisions based upon risk.

It may be appropriate for the parties to require medical conformation that the donor is free from conditions which could affect the future wellbeing of the surrogate and the child.

17 Consultation Question 10: We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

My wife and I see no reason why the 'mechanics' of the surrogacy act should prevent an individual case from following the new pathway. We believe that intended parents and surrogates should be able to make their own decisions based upon risk.

While in no way denigrating the role of CAFCASS and their performance in the case of our twin surrogacy, my wife and I wish to convey that this was by far the most stressful aspect of the entire surrogacy journey - including international surrogacy and an extended period overseas.

My wife and I believe that the requirement for a detailed welfare assessment is not justified, although we recognise that this is in line with the process for adoption. All around the UK, people bring children into the world without such an assessment of their suitability and that of their home, many of which births are not desired or intended - in complete contrast to persons who invest such time, emotion and finances in pursuing surrogacy. It therefore seems extremely unfair to make the award of a parental order subject to such assessment.

To have the welfare assessment AFTER living with our children for several months seemed almost akin to cruelty. It felt like a threat to our recent happiness. If a welfare assessment has to happen, it should happen during or before preparation of a surrogacy agreement, under the auspices of a regulated surrogacy body, as proposed in the new pathway.

Naturally we support the continued oversight of parents and children by health visitors, as in any other birth.

25 Consultation Question 18: For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

No

Please provide your views below:

My wife and I do not believe that this restriction is necessary, provided that for-profit bodies are regulated in the same way as non-profit bodies, and are held accountable to the same standards of performance.

There is a fine line between discouraging widespread market-induced offering of surrogacy services by socially-disadvantaged women and constricting the development as an acceptable approach to family creation.

My wife and I believe that the current non-profit approach may be a factor in the historically low availability of surrogates and may have contributed to the perception of surrogacy as a secretive activity.

Chapter 10: Children's Access to Information About Surrogacy Arrangements

51 Consultation Question 43: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18. Do consultees agree?

52 Consultation Question 44: We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

On balance, I believe this should not be mandatory. Although my wife and I support the guidance to disclose to surrogate children the origin of their birth, we believe it should be the right of the parents to choose whether to do so. The mandatory presence of surrogacy status on the birth certificate may work against those who choose not to disclose.

We believe this should be offered as an option when a birth certificate is issued.

Chapter 12: Eligibility Criteria for Both a Parental Order and for the New Pathway

64 Consultation Question 56:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

This proposal should take account of intended parents who, while domiciled in the UK, live or spend a considerable proportion of their time overseas for work or other purposes, and who may not maintain a physical address in the UK.

66 Consultation Question 58: We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them. Do consultees agree?

67 Consultation Question 59:

Please provide views below:

My wife and I believe there is no justification for not equally applying the same approach to the new pathway and the parental order route in cases of domestic surrogacy.

Yes

Please provide views below:

My wife and I support this proposal on the condition that double donation is accepted in UK surrogacy. International surrogacy would not be as attractive if UK surrogacy were easier.

68 Consultation Question 60: We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

69 Consultation Question 61: We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order. Do consultees agree?

Yes

70 Consultation Question 62:

Please provide your views below:

My wife and I believe it is discriminatory to apply an age limit in any form, particularly as the pathway to parenthood can be extremely long, in our case 10 years.

Furthermore, we believe there is no justification for not equally applying the same approach to the new pathway and the parental order route in cases of domestic surrogacy.

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Note that many surrogacy agencies impose their own practical rules that potential surrogates must have previously successfully carried and delivered their own child before applying to become a surrogate, to demonstrate their fecundity to intended parents. This generally tends to push the lower age of potential surrogates upwards.

76 Consultation Question 68: We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed. It appears sensible to harmonise adoption and surrogacy practices

78 Consultation Question 70: We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

We note from experience that many surrogacy agencies (international) impose their own practical rules that potential surrogates must have previously successfully carried and delivered their own child before applying to become a surrogate, to demonstrate their fecundity to intended parents. This generally tends to push the lower age of potential surrogates upward.

My wife and I believe that this is a practical consideration that will naturally be addressed by a) agencies and b) prospective parents, based on their risk appetite. The inexperience of a potential surrogate is of not of a critical nature to the regulation of surrogacy, and therefore this should not become a mandatory eligibility requirement.

79 Consultation Question 71: We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway. Do consultees agree?

Yes

My wife and I believe that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy.

82 Consultation Question 74:

Please provide your views below:

My wife and I believe that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy.

83 Consultation Question 75:

Please provide your views below:

My wife and I believe that intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy

84 Consultation Question 76: We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

Please provide your views below:

My wife and I believe that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth; medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or, specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

Please provide your views below:

My wife and I believe that intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for all of the above reasons . The surrogate is due all consideration for the potential risks and discomfort involved.

left to the parties to negotiate.

Please provide your views below:

My wife and I believe that, in an ideal scenario, the intended parents should be free to pay to the surrogate whatever they feel happy with. During our surrogacy (international), we wanted to show our gratitude to our surrogate.

88 Consultation Question 80: We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

Please provide your views below:

My wife and I see no reason why such payments should not be included in a surrogacy agreement/contract.

89 Consultation Question 81:

Please provide your views below:

My wife and I agree with both of these aspects.

90 Consultation Question 82:

It should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

Please provide your views below:

Not Answered

Please provide your views below:

My wife and I recognise that this question has two major aspects. We believe that the payment should be any sum any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy and captured in a surrogacy agreement, which may encourage more women to undertake surrogacy. However we recognise that market forces may generally push the cost higher, disadvantaging intended parents who do cannot afford the 'going' rate .

On balance, my wife and I believe that the benefit of an increase in availability of surrogates would outweigh the market-led increase in cost.

Please provide any views below:

91 Consultation Question 83:

Please provide views below:

My wife and I believe that a surrogacy agreement should be based upon the simple fact of carrying a child. If the surrogate has in good faith carried the child, then it is unreasonable to reduce the payment to the surrogate to reflect an event that is beyond her control, and which in fact may relate to a foetus that is not biologically related to her.

We do however believe that if the surrogacy agreement contains clauses related to non-consumption of alcohol, nicotine etc, and it is shown that the surrogate did not comply with these clauses, it would be reasonable to impose penalties in the even of such an unfortunate event.

92 Consultation Question 84: We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

My wife and I agree that the proposal that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

93 Consultation Question 85: We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

96 Consultation Question 88:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

My wife and I strongly agree that the proposal that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate. It is only right and fair that a surrogacy agreement should have legal contractual status and that the surrogate should have adequate legal protection.

No

Please provide your views below:

My wife and I believe that it is reasonable to impose certain requirements regarding lifestyle which could harm the unborn baby, such as smoking or consumption of alcohol, with which most parents comply these days. We do not see a reason why such terms should preclude enforceability of a surrogacy agreement.

Chapter 16: International Surrogacy Arrangements

97 Consultation Question 89: We invite overseas surrogates (or bodies representing or advocating for surrogates) to share with us their experiences of international surrogacy arrangements.

Please provide your views below:

My wife and I (both UK citizens) have twin children through gestational surrogacy [REDACTED]. The embryos were created in [REDACTED] from my gametes and eggs from a [REDACTED], then carried by a [REDACTED] surrogate.

We utilised the services of an agency in [REDACTED] to introduce us to a surrogate and to administer the surrogacy. This was our second surrogacy arrangement with the agency; we unfortunately had to abandon the first arrangement after multiple failures to implant.

Our overall experience of surrogacy in [REDACTED] was very positive; it should be noted that my wife and I are long-term expatriate professionals, so we are at ease with living and operating in countries outside the UK.

We developed a very good working relationship with the agency and also a warm relationship with the surrogates who helped us (two).

Delivery of the babies and immediate post-natal care of the babies and surrogate was handled well by a [REDACTED] hospital in [REDACTED]. We entered into a surrogacy agreement which was enforceable under [REDACTED] law, while observing the requirements of the UK process to ensure alignment. We took legal advice in both UK and [REDACTED] to achieve this. We also took a great deal of care to prepare ourselves for the UK passport and parental order processes and the [REDACTED] process. I would observe that it was a very intensive and time-consuming programme and probably not easy to do successfully unless both parents are able to devote their whole time to the processes at the same time as rearing new-borns. Of the various processes, the [REDACTED] process was the simplest. I took 4 months leave of absence from my job and we lived in [REDACTED] until we received passports for our sons. The necessity to keep the children in the birth country until passports arrived (almost 3 months) is an onerous and expensive obligation.

98 Consultation Question 90: We invite organisations focused on children's rights and welfare in the international context to share with us their views on our proposed reforms and consultation questions in this chapter.

Please provide your views below:

99 Consultation Question 91: We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of their experience of applying to register a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement as a British citizen and obtaining a passport for the child. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have about causes of delays in the process.

Please provide your views below:

Our twins were born in [REDACTED]. We submitted our application for UK passports to the UK consulate in [REDACTED]. It would not have been possible to reduce the time to arrive at this date, due to the requirements to obtain documents from various sources. The passports were issued on [REDACTED] and we received them 1-2 days later. We departed [REDACTED]. From submission of applications to receipt of passports was slightly over 9 weeks. During that period, I had to attend a screening meeting in [REDACTED] followed by a telephone interview with the passport authority in UK. It appeared to me that a significant amount of effort by the consulate and passport authority went into verifying documentation and process required for the parental order process; there appeared to be significant overlap and duplication in this regard.

100 Consultation Question 92: We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

My wife and I wholeheartedly agree with this proposal, based upon our experience. As a registered UK citizen, we see no reason that this should not be possible. Furthermore, as soon as evidence of genetic affinity (paternity) is provided, the process should logically be able to continue at pace.

101 Consultation Question 93: We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

Please provide your views below:

We have never experienced any issues relating to visas for our twins, nor have we ever been asked any questions relating to their birth during applications for visas or immigration in any country.

103 Consultation Question 95: We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. 105 Consultation Question 97: We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

My wife and I strongly agree with this proposal. We had to work very diligently to obtain a full understanding of the process, the requirements and paperwork.

Ideally this guidance should be carefully tailored to sit alongside guidance on surrogacy itself, since it is impossible to separate the two issues in international surrogacy.

106 Consultation Question 98: We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Ideally, my wife and I would like to say no' to this question. However we recognise that safeguards against immigration fraud, child trafficking and exploitation of international surrogates who may be vulnerable must be maintained.

119 Consultation Question 111: We invite consultees' views as to the impact (social, emotional, financial or otherwise) of the current law where the intended parents are not the legal parents from birth of the child born of the surrogacy arrangement.

Please provide your views below:

My wife and I can must frame our response to this question in the context of our international surrogacy.

My wife, although a strong woman, found the entire concept of the parental order to be most upsetting and frustrating. Our twin boys were demonstrably genetically ours and the ■■■■■ authorities agreed by issuing birth certificates with the names of both my wife and I, yet were required to jump through hoops some 6 months later to be awarded our own child. We look around ourselves at parents who fall into pregnancy and sometime exhibit little care of their children, yet we, who had expended considerable time, effort and money in deliberate pursuit of a family, were required to apply for custody of our own children. The financial cost was substantial.

The requirement to wait for more than 9 weeks for a passport forced me to take 4 months leave of absence from work and almost cost me my job.

The financial burden of remaining in a foreign country for nearly 3 months was substantial.

Regarding emotional and social burden, my wife and I are personally aware of many couples who have suffered as a result of this process, coming on top of the heightened stress of achieving parenthood under difficult circumstances.

Question No.	Consultation Question
Q1	Consultation Question 7. In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have: (1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth, (2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and (3) met eligibility requirements, on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q1	Yes
Q2	Consultation Question 11. We provisionally propose that:

	(1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child; (2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and (3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q2	no
Q3	Consultation Question 12. We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that: (1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child; (2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and (3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q3	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q4	Consultation Question 15. We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.
Your Response to Q4	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q5	Consultation Question 27.

	We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway: (1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and (2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q5	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q6	Consultation Question 28. We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q6	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q7	Consultation Question 29. For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and (2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.
Your Response to Q7	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q8	Consultation Question 55. We provisionally propose that: (1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available; (2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

	(a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or (b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and (3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q8	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q9	Consultation Question 30. We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q9	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q10	Consultation Question 32. We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway. We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.
Your Response to Q10	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q11	Consultation Question 67. We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway: (1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and (2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15. Do consultees agree?

Your Response to Q11	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q12	Consultation Question 68. We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q12	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q13	Consultation Question 88. We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q13	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q14	Consultation Question 42. We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q14	yes
Q15	Consultation Question 62. We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity: (1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or (2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made. We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

Your Response to Q15	no
Q16	Consultation Question 70. We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.
Your Response to Q16	no
Q17	Consultation Question 33. We provisionally propose that: (1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations; (2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and (3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation. Do consultees agree?

Q18	Consultation Question 35. We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q18	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q19	Consultation Question 37. We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.
Your Response to Q19	no
Q20	Consultation Question 59.

	We provisionally propose that the new pathway – (1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but (2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements. We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q20	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q21	Consultation Question 46. We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q21	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q22	Consultation Question 47. We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that: (1) the register should be maintained by the Authority; (2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include: (a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and

	(b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and (3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q22	no
Q23	Consultation Question 48. We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.
Your Response to Q23	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q24	Consultation Question 49. We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances: (1) where his or her legal parents have consented; (2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or (3) in any other circumstances.

Q25	Consultation Question 51. We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so. Do consultees agree?

	We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Q26	Consultation Question 52. We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so: (1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or (2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

Q27	Consultation Question 53. For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.
Your Response to Q27	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q28	Consultation Question 72. We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be: (1) based on an allowance; (2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or (3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.
Your Response to Q28	2
Q29	Consultation Question 73. We invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and

	(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered “essential”.
Your Response to Q29	yes
Q30	Consultation Question 74. We invite consultees’ views as to: (1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.
Your Response to Q30	yes
Q31	Consultation Question 75. We invite consultees’ views as to: (1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and (2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.
Your Response to Q31	yes
Q32	Consultation Question 76. We invite consultees’ views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).
Your Response to Q32	yes
Q33	Consultation Question 77. We invite consultees’ views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings: (1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or (2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).
Your Response to Q33	Click or tap here to enter text.

Q34	Consultation Question 78. We invite consultees to share their experiences: (1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and (2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.
Your Response to Q34	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q35	Consultation Question 79. We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following: (1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth; (2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or (3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy. We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation. We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be: (1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or (2) left to the parties to negotiate.
Your Response to Q35	Yes, 2 left to parties to negotiate
Q36	Consultation Question 80. We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.
Your Response to Q36	yes
Q37	Consultation Question 81.

	We invite consultees' views as to whether: (1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and (2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.
Your Response to Q37	yes
Q38	Consultation Question 82. We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be: (1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or (2) a fixed fee set by the regulator. We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee: (1) no other payments; (2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy; (3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy; (4) lost earnings; (5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or (6) gifts.
Your Response to Q38	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q39	Consultation Question 84. We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q39	Click or tap here to enter text.

Q40	Consultation Question 85. We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.
Your Response to Q40	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q41	Consultation Question 92. We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q41	yes
Q42	Consultation Question 94. We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that: (1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or (2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.
Your Response to Q42	yes

Q43	Consultation Question 95. We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q43	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q44	Consultation Question 97. We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q44	yes
Q45	Consultation Question 99. We provisionally propose that: the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q45	yes
Q46	Consultation Question 107. We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area. We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

	We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

Chapter 6: The parental order procedure

8 Consultation Question 1:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

All International surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a Judge of the High Court. There is a history of International surrogacy abuse and exploitation and a high level of scrutiny should be maintained.

There are examples of women being coerced into selling their baby or acting as a surrogate for financial gain. There is ample evidence of surrogacy, in a context of extremely financially unequal contexts, being highly exploitative and where the financial necessity experienced by the woman ("surrogate") or profit potential for some, totally undermines or overrides any concept of informed consent.

Acknowledging the potential for abuse in surrogacy isn't just a problem in an overseas context, the more that surrogacy is normalised and legitimised the greater potential for abuse. Having your own 'biological' family is not a human right for the adults. It is a right to born children to have a family to feel safe and loved, so adoption needs to be prioritised over surrogacy as much as possible.

Please provide your views below:

9 Consultation Question 2:

Please provide your views below:

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

The consultation paper mentions that the UK has ratified the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC) and its Optional Protocol on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography (the Optional Protocol). However, the consultation paper does not explain that ratifying an international treaty like CEDAW and UNCRC places a legally binding obligation to abide by its terms. In fact the paper suggests the opposite. There is no 'right to procreate'.

10 Consultation Question 3: We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Please provide your views below:

11 Consultation Question 4:

No

Please provide your views below:

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

12 Consultation Question 5: We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the Family Procedure Rules 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Prospective parents should be DBS checked.

13 Consultation Question 6:

Please provide your views below:

Chapter 8: Legal Parenthood: Proposals for Reform - A New Pathway

14 Consultation Question 7:

No

Please provide your views below:

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. Notice the capital letters. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all. In fact there is no organisation listed as children safeguarding experts or women rights representatives among the consultants for the changes proposed.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

15 Consultation Question 8:

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

Bringing children to the world, should NEVER become a business.

Not Answered

Please provide your views below:

16 Consultation Question 9: We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

NO MENTION at all, in the consultation of Egg donation. It is dangerous, with about 10% getting complications, 1-2% life threatening. The Eggsploration film by Jennifer Lahl is shocking, birthing should not become a commercial operation USA style.

17 Consultation Question 10: We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

18 Consultation Question 11:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline. Birthing should NEVER become a commercial enterprise.

19 Consultation Question 12:

Not Answered

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

21 Consultation Question 14:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

22 Consultation Question 15:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

Yes

Please share your views below:

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

23 Consultation Question 16:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

The mother should be the legal parent for the fourth trimester to ensure that the children right to the best start in life is facilitated/encouraged.

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

24 Consultation Question 17: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

25 Consultation Question 18: For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

26 Consultation Question 19:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

Please provide your views below:

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

27 Consultation Question 20:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

28 Consultation Question 21: We invite consultees' views as to: (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

29 Consultation Question 22:

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

30 Consultation Question 23:

Please provide your views below:

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

31 Consultation Question 24:

Please provide your views below:

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

32 Consultation Question 25: We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Please provide your views below:

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

33 Consultation Question 26:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. 35 Consultation Question 28: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object. Do consultees agree?

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the 'intended parents' should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

Chapter 9: The Regulation of Surrogacy Arrangements

37 Consultation Question 30: We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

38 Consultation Question 31: We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

Please provide your views below:

39 Consultation Question 32:

40 Consultation Question 33:

No

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children. It will damage women, children and family relations and will make a commercial business out of a biological event.

Regulated surrogacy will only legitimise what should not be a business profiting from a biological event and creating 'farming' children.

Children are not for profit. Adoption should be prioritised over surrogacy always.

42 Consultation Question 35: We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy as a business. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.' Adoption should always be prioritised over surrogacy, which could take the form of child trafficking.

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Women, poor women at that will be most affected by this business model, as wealthy families will pay for the creation and handing over of human beings.

43 Consultation Question 36: We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

44 Consultation Question 37: We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

45 Consultation Question 37: We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

46 Consultation Question 38: We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

Please provide your views below:

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Poor women will be tempted by this business and will negatively impact women and children.

47 Consultation Question 39: We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

Please provide your views below:

Surrogacy can be considered a violation of the human rights of both women and children, regulation would drive an increase in surrogacy and it will sanction the practice in detriment of adoption.

48 Consultation Question 40: We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms). Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

49 Consultation Question 41: We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

50 Consultation Question 42: We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent. Exploitation of vulnerable women will follow.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Advertisements tend to present a rosy picture of the product they sell and ignore the negative effects, flaws, risks or dangers associated with it, so such publicity of which I consider an INHUMAN practice of creating children to be separated from their birthing mother (the only environment they are familiar with) from the moment of birth seems barbaric.

Chapter 10: Children's Access to Information About Surrogacy Arrangements

51 Consultation Question 43: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

52 Consultation Question 44: We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

53 Consultation Question 45: We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

Please provide your views below:

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need of reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

The birth certificate is about the child born. It should reflect biological facts.

54 Consultation Question 46: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings. Do consultees agree?

Yes

55 Consultation Question 47:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

56 Consultation Question 48: We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

Please provide your views below:

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

57 Consultation Question 49:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

It appears that not many surrogated children have been consulted. Some will have an adverse reaction to learn of the way their came to be and might need psychological support to cope.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

58 Consultation Question 50: We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

Chapter 11: Eligibility Criteria for a Parental Order

62 Consultation Question 54: We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished. Do consultees agree?

Please provide your views below:

No . The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

63 Consultation Question 55:

No

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Chapter 12: Eligibility Criteria for Both a Parental Order and for the New Pathway

64 Consultation Question 56:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism. This is a BIG worry.

Yes

Please provide views below:

68 Consultation Question 60: We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity. Being a parent it is not a human right. By genetically selecting reproduction of people that wouldn't do so without intervention we are creating an 'artificial' selection bias which will discriminate against those lacking the means to finance such practice.

Adoption should always be preferred as means to create families.

69 Consultation Question 61: We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order. Do consultees agree?

71 Consultation Question 63:

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

Yes

Please provide your views below:

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

72 Consultation Question 64:

No

Please provide your views below:

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

There is evidence that human brain development into adulthood continues until the age of 25 and this should be the minimum age for an IP.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

73 Consultation Question 65:

Other

Please provide your views below:

Minimum age of 18 for a surrogate (and also 64 minimum age 18 for commissioning parent of surrogate baby. Who would be funding this I ask?) Do you have a teenage daughter? Ask her what she thinks about becoming a surrogate mother at 18. My daughter thinks young women that age should be planning careers and going to university. And also that they are still young enough to deserve protection from adults who may seek to exploit or coerce them.

No

Please provide your views below:

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Having a child via artificial means involving surrogacy might be a capricious enterprise in an adolescent mind. This situation should be avoided at all cost.

Please provide your views below:

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Having experienced pregnancy might give a woman an idea of what it is she is letting herself in for. Furthermore, if the woman already has a family and the risk that a pregnancy poses for her and her own family should also be considered.

79 Consultation Question 71: We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Pregnancy is a risky event and the higher number of pregnancies any given woman undertakes, the more risk she runs.

Chapter 15: Payments to the Surrogate: Options for Reform

80 Consultation Question 72:

Not Answered

Please provide your views below:

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Despite the above, it pains me to see that surrogacy as a business will exploit women's bodies, families and lives. The industry set up around surrogacy, from clinical, legal and matching services will profit away from human beings' desperation (both IP and surrogate mothers) and the product of this bonfire of greed (genetical survival and money) will pick up the pieces when he or she becomes an adult. It is a very sorrowful state of affairs that allows for the trafficking of children to happen.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

It pains me to see women exploited and children sold. However, a life insurance should be in place for the woman if she has children of her own in case pregnancy is fatal.

84 Consultation Question 76: We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

87 Consultation Question 79:

Please provide your views below:

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

This is encouraging surrogacy as IPs will know that they can engage in 'booking' a surrogate and bring the baby (trafficking) to the UK, where the child will be given a passport. This is like allowing people to buy children abroad and have a guarantee they will be accepted back in UK.

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Adoption should be the preferred form to create a family.

Also, penalties for children trafficking and human exploitation should be included, so IP with other aims in mind other than caring for a child (for example, paedophilia, organ donation, a career for old age, etc..) should be mentioned.

No

Please provide your views below:

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

115 Consultation Question 107:

Please provide your views below:

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself.

There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

However, private health arrangements might also be a method to control surrogate mothers and coerce them into satisfying the IP remit.

Adoption should always be the preferred means of forming a family if assistance is needed. This should always be added to the information about surrogacy, with examples of IP that have changed their mind and decide to go that path satisfactorily.

Please provide your views below:

As mentioned in the previous box and through the survey.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes. This might be difficult if the surrogate is a migrant and doesn't speak English, so special provision for translators to be present or native 'responsible adults' that might be able to pick up the truth of the situation.

Adoption as a preferred option. The need to check IP properly as for adoption. The need for the surrogate to be over 25 and preferably another already. The danger of coercion and the penalties for human exploitation and child trafficking. The rights of the surrogate to withdraw. The rights of the child to contact surrogate. etc

Please provide your views below:

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

116 Consultation Question 108: We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

Please provide your views below:

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women. It is human exploitation and puts women at risk.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Also what happens if the child is rejected by the IPs because of birth defects, or other disabilities that become visible later in childhood or adulthood? How will this situation be treated.

What if the surrogate dies during birth or becomes disable for life, how this will affect her own family and what is the responsibility of IP towards the surrogate in that situation.

How to negotiate the relationship of surrogate/donors and offspring in later life?

I'm not IP at present. There is a possibility that I would need to be an IP in the future and I would have to remind myself at that time that Money, payment or any other form of financial transaction should not be brought into reproduction because it will set an industry around exploitation of women and child trafficking.

Please don't tell me people will be crowdfunding this?

Spent in fertility treatment shouldn't need to be relevant to surrogacy.

Money should not be involved to avoid human exploitation and child trafficking.

125 Consultation Question 117: We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Please provide your views below:

126 Consultation Question 118: We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this Consultation Paper.

Please provide your views below:

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy –

‘intended parents,’ women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the ‘intended parents’ the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn’t appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women’s position relative to men’s, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their ‘parents’ not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners’ ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that ‘procreative liberty’ confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a ‘surrogate.’ These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the ‘new pathway’ violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother’s choice to transfer the child “must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation.”
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government’s consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women’s and children’s human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

- (1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

- (2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

- (1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and
- (2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

- 1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

- 1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

- 1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

- 1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

- (1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;
- (2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or
- (3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

- 1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

- (1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,
- (2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and
- (3) met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I strongly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

- 1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

- 1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

- 1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

- 1.12 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;
- (2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and
- (3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

- (1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;
- (2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and
- (3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

- (1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;
- (2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and
- (3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

- (1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;
- (2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and
- (3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.17 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

- (1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and
- (2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.19 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Consultation Question 17.

1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

1.21 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

1.22 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

1.23 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

- (1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:
 - (a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and
 - (b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or
- (2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

1.24 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

- (1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;
- (2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and
- (3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.25 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and
- (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.26 We invite consultees' views:

- (1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and
- (2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:

- (a) administrative, or
- (b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.27 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and
- (2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.28 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

- (1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and
- (2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.29 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

- (1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and
- (2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.31 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

- (1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and
- (2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify a measure that contravenes recommendations of

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.32 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the ‘intended parents’ should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child’s best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women’s reproductive capacities.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.33 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees’ views as to:

- (1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

- (2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.140

Consultation Question 30.

- 1.34 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

- 1.35 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

N/A

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.36 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.37 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.38 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

- (2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

- (3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.39 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

- (1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;
- (2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;
- (3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;
- (4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and
- (5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

I agree to none of the above

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.40 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.42 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.44 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.45 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.46 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.47 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

1.48 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

1.49 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

1.50 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

1.51 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.52 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.53 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.54 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.55 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.56 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.57 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;
- (2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:
 - (a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and
 - (b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and
- (3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

- 1.59 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

- 1.60 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

- (1) where his or her legal parents have consented;
- (2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or
- (3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

- 1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

- 1.62 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.63 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.64 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

- (1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or
- (2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.65 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.66 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.67 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

- (2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:
 - (a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or
 - (b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and
- (3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.68 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.69 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.70 We invite consultees' views on whether:

- (1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or
- (2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

1.71 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

1.72 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

- (1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but
- (2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.73 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

1.74 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Consultation Question 60.

1.75 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.76 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.77 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

- (1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or
- (2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.79 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.80 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

- (1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or
- (2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.81 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.82 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.83 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood.

I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.84 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.85 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.86 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for a 'new pathway'. At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.87 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.88 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

- (1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and
- (2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.90 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.91 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

- (1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;
- (2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and
- (3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.92 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.94 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

- (1) based on an allowance;
- (2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or
- (3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and
- (2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Consultation Question 76.

1.99 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

- (1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or
- (2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.101 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

- (1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and
- (2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

- (1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;
- (2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or
- (3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.103 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

- (1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or
- (2) left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.105 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

- (1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and
- (2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

- (1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or
- (2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Neither

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

- (1) no other payments;
- (2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;
- (3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;
- (4) lost earnings;
- (5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or
- (6) gifts.

None of the above

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to make any type of fee or payment to the birth mother for her 'services'.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.110 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

- (1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;
- (2) to any miscarriage or termination; or
- (3) some other period of time (please specify).

None of the above

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

1.112 We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Paragraph 15.74

Consultation Question 85.

1.113 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

1.114 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.115 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

- (1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and
- (2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

1.116 We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.117 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

Paragraph 15.99

Consultation Question 89.

1.118 We invite overseas surrogates (or bodies representing or advocating for surrogates) to share with us their experiences of international surrogacy arrangements.

N/A

Paragraph 16.10

Consultation Question 90.

1.119 We invite organisations focused on children's rights and welfare in the international context to share with us their views on our proposed reforms and consultation questions in this chapter.

Paragraph 16.12

Consultation Question 91.

1.120 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of their experience of applying to register a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement as a British citizen and obtaining a passport for the child. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have about causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the ‘intended parents’ to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur’s recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.53

Consultation Question 93.

1.122 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.68

Consultation Question 94.

1.123 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child’s country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the ‘intended parents’ to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport before the child is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur’s recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling

and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

1.124 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.125 We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or
- (2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.126 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.127 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

1.128 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.129 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.130 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.131 We provisionally propose that:

1.132 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.133 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.134 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.135 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

- (1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and
- (2) if such a restriction is necessary, there should be a process allowing foreign intended parents to remove the child from the jurisdiction of the UK for this purpose and with the approval of the court and, if so, what form should that process take.

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.137 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to:

- (1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and
- (2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself.

There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.144 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.145 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy

arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.146 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

- (1) when the child was born;
- (2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;
- (3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and
- (4) whether they are a:
 - (a) opposite-sex couple;
 - (b) male same-sex couple;
 - (c) female same-sex couple;
 - (d) single woman; or
 - (e) single man.

N/A

Paragraph 18.2

Consultation Question 110.

1.147 We invite consultees who have experience of applying for a parental order in the UK to tell us:

- (1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;
- (2) whether they had legal advice before the making of the parental order;
- (3) whether they were represented by a lawyer in court; and
- (4) the cost of any legal advice or representation.

N/A

Paragraph 18.4

Consultation Question 111.

1.148 We invite consultees' views as to the impact (social, emotional, financial or otherwise) of the current law where the intended parents are not the legal parents from birth of the child born of the surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 18.6

Consultation Question 112.

1.149 We invite consultees to tell us what they have paid for, or to provide evidence about the cost of:

- (1) medical screening; and
- (2) implications counselling

(where possible separating out the cost of such screening, tests or implications counselling from any other costs involved with fertility treatment).

N/A

1.150 We invite legal consultees, who advise on surrogacy and parental order proceedings, to provide evidence of what they would charge:

- (1) to provide advice sufficient to meet the proposed requirement for independent legal advice discussed in Chapter 13; and

- (2) to draft, advise on and negotiate the written surrogacy agreement required for the new pathway.

N/A

Paragraph 18.8

Consultation Question 113.

1.151 We invite consultees to tell us of the impact of:

- (1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and
- (2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:
 - (a) in the new pathway;
 - (b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or
 - (c) in both situations.

Paragraph 18.11

Consultation Question 114.

1.152 We invite consultees who consider that they might be able to fulfil the role of the independent professional discussed in Chapter 9 to tell us:

- (1) their profession; and
- (2) what they would charge to provide such a service.

N/A

Paragraph 18.13

Consultation Question 115.

1.153 We invite consultees who are intended parents to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

- (1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and

- (2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

1.154 We invite consultees who are surrogates to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

- (1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and
- (2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

Paragraph 18.15

Consultation Question 116.

1.155 We ask consultees who are intended parents to tell us:

- (1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;
- (2) what they spent, in total, on the surrogacy arrangement(s) that led to the birth of their child(ren), including the cost of fertility treatment, payments to the surrogate and payments to any surrogacy agency or organisation;
- (3) how they raised the funds for the surrogacy arrangement(s);
- (4) what they spent on any fertility treatment prior to entering into a surrogacy arrangement (where that treatment did not lead to the birth of a child); and
- (5) how they raised the funds for the fertility treatment.

N/A

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.156 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.157 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

I agree - but disagree with the right to objection in the scenario above.

I recognise that for things like safeguarding etc there should be a right to object, but if the requirements are met about, safeguarding issues etc will not arise.

Plus I feel there should be a difference as to whether the surrogate is the child's genetic parents. If the child is genetically linked, then the above is acceptable. If not, I would again disagree. It could mean that a surrogate can stop the genetic parents from becoming parents when she has no genetic links.

Consultation Question 1.

We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

1. all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

2. if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

- (1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and
- (2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

3. there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;
4. it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or
5. further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

6. entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,
7. complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and
8. met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Consultation Question 9.

We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

We provisionally propose that:

9. the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;

10. this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and

11. the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia.

After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

12. the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;
13. if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and
14. the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

15. the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;

16. if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and

17. if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

(1.15.1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;

(1.15.2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and

(1.15.3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.1 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

18. the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and

19. the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Paragraph 8.77

Consultation Question 17.

We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

20. it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:

1. for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and
2. for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or

21. the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

22. the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;

23. if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and

24. if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Consultation Question 21.

We invite consultees' views as to:

25. a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and
26. how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

We invite consultees' views:

27. as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and
28. if so, as to whether should this oversight be:
 1. administrative, or
 2. judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

29. whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and

30. if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

31. as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and

32. what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

- 33. the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and
- 34. they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

35. the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and

36. if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the 'intended parents' should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women's reproductive capacities.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to:

37. whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

38. whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Consultation Question 30.

We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Consultation Question 31.

We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

We provisionally propose that:

39. there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

40. there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

- 42. representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;
- 43. managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;
- 44. ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;
- 45. training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and
- 46. providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

We provisionally propose that:

47. the register should be maintained by the Authority;

48. the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:

1. identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and
2. non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and

49. to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

50. where his or her legal parents have consented;

51. if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or

52. in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

53. if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or

54. if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

We provisionally propose that:

55. the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

56. the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

1. where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or
2. following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and

57. the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

We invite consultees' views on whether:

58. the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or

59. the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

60. should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but

61. that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 12.64

Consultation Question 60.

We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

62. for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or

63. for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

64. those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or

65. if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for a 'new pathway'. At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

66. the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and
67. the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

- (1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;
- (2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and
- (3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

- 68. based on an allowance;
- 69. based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or
- 70. based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

We invite consultees' views as to:

- 71. whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and
- 72. the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

We invite consultees' views as to:

73. whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and

74. the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

We invite consultees' views as to:

75. whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and

76. the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.29

Consultation Question 76.

We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

77. her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or

78. other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

We invite consultees to share their experiences:

79. of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and

80. where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

81. pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;
82. medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or
83. specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

- 84. a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or
- 85. left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

We invite consultees' views as to whether:

86. intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and

87. if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. (checkbox)

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

- 88. any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or
- 89. a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

- 90. no other payments;
- 91. essential costs relating to the pregnancy;
- 92. additional costs relating to the pregnancy;
- 93. lost earnings;
- 94. compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or
- 95. gifts.

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to make any type of fee or payment to the birth mother for her 'services'.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

- 96. in the first trimester of pregnancy only;
- 97. to any miscarriage or termination; or
- 98. some other period of time (please specify).

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Paragraph 15.74

Consultation Question 85.

We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

99. for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and

100. for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

Paragraph 15.99

Consultation Question 89.

We invite overseas surrogates (or bodies representing or advocating for surrogates) to share with us their experiences of international surrogacy arrangements.

N/A

Paragraph 16.10

Consultation Question 90.

We invite organisations focused on children's rights and welfare in the international context to share with us their views on our proposed reforms and consultation questions in this chapter.

N/A

Paragraph 16.12

Consultation Question 91.

We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of their experience of applying to register a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement as a British citizen and obtaining a passport for the child. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have about causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 16.53

Consultation Question 93.

We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.68

Consultation Question 94.

We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport before the child is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

We provisionally propose that:

- (1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or
- (2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

We provisionally propose that:

the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx>

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

We invite consultees' views as to whether:

101. any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and

102. if such a restriction is necessary, there should be a process allowing foreign intended parents to remove the child from the jurisdiction of the UK for this purpose and with the approval of the court and, if so, what form should that process take.

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

We invite consultees' views as to:

103. whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and

104. if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself. There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other countries.

We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

105. when the child was born;
106. whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;
107. whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and
108. whether they are a:
 1. opposite-sex couple;
 2. male same-sex couple;
 3. female same-sex couple;
 4. single woman; or
 5. single man.

N/A

Paragraph 18.2

Consultation Question 110.

We invite consultees who have experience of applying for a parental order in the UK to tell us:

109. whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;
110. whether they had legal advice before the making of the parental order;
111. whether they were represented by a lawyer in court; and
112. the cost of any legal advice or representation.

N/A

Paragraph 18.4

Consultation Question 111.

We invite consultees' views as to the impact (social, emotional, financial or otherwise) of the current law where the intended parents are not the legal parents from birth of the child born of the surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 18.6

Consultation Question 112.

We invite consultees to tell us what they have paid for, or to provide evidence about the cost of:

113. medical screening; and
114. implications counselling
(where possible separating out the cost of such screening, tests or implications counselling from any other costs involved with fertility treatment).

N/A

We invite legal consultees, who advise on surrogacy and parental order proceedings, to provide evidence of what they would charge:

115. to provide advice sufficient to meet the proposed requirement for independent legal advice discussed in Chapter 13; and
116. to draft, advise on and negotiate the written surrogacy agreement required for the new pathway.

N/A

Paragraph 18.8

Consultation Question 113.

We invite consultees to tell us of the impact of:

117. the current requirement of a genetic link; and
118. any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:
 1. in the new pathway;
 2. in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or
 3. in both situations.

Paragraph 18.11

Consultation Question 114.

We invite consultees who consider that they might be able to fulfil the role of the independent professional discussed in Chapter 9 to tell us:

119. their profession; and
120. what they would charge to provide such a service.

N/A

Paragraph 18.13

Consultation Question 115.

We invite consultees who are intended parents to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

121. if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and
122. if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

We invite consultees who are surrogates to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

123. if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and
124. if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

Paragraph 18.15

Consultation Question 116.

We ask consultees who are intended parents to tell us:

- 125. whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;
- 126. what they spent, in total, on the surrogacy arrangement(s) that led to the birth of their child(ren), including the cost of fertility treatment, payments to the surrogate and payments to any surrogacy agency or organisation;
- 127. how they raised the funds for the surrogacy arrangement(s);
- 128. what they spent on any fertility treatment prior to entering into a surrogacy arrangement (where that treatment did not lead to the birth of a child); and
- 129. how they raised the funds for the fertility treatment.

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.
