There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

(1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and

(2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.31 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and

(2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.32 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the 'intended parents' should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women's reproductive capacities.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.33 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

(2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.140

Consultation Question 30.

1.34 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

1.35 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

N/A

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.36 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.37 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.38 We provisionally propose that:

(1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.39 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

(1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;

(2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;

(3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;

(4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and

(5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

LEAVE ALL CHECK BOXES BLANK (i.e. none of the above)

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.40 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.42 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.44 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.45 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.46 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.47 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

1.48 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

1.49 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

1.50 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

1.51 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.52 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.53 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.54 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.55 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.56 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.57 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;

(2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:

(a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and

(b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and

(3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

1.59 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.60 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

(1) where his or her legal parents have consented;

(2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or

(3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

1.62 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.63 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.64 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

(1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or

(2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.65 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.66 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.67 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

(2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

(a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or

(b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and

(3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.68 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.69 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.70 We invite consultees' views on whether:

(1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or

(2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

1.71 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

1.72 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

(1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but

(2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.73 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

1.74 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 12.64

Consultation Question 60.

1.75 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.76 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.77 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

(1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or

(2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.79 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.80 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

(1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or

(2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.81 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.82 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.83 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood.

I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.84 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.85 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.86 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for a 'new pathway'. At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.87 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.88 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

(1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and

(2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.90 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.91 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

(1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;

(2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and

(3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.92 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.94 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

(1) based on an allowance;

(2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or

(3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and

(2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.29

Consultation Question 76.

1.99 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

(1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or

(2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.101 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

(1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and

(2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

(1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;

(2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or

(3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.103 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

(1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or

(2) left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.105 We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and

(2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. (check box)

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

(1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or

(2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

(1) no other payments;

(2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;

(3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;

(4) lost earnings;

(5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or

(6) gifts.

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to make any type of fee or payment to the birth mother for her 'services'.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.110 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

(1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;

(2) to any miscarriage or termination; or

(3) some other period of time (please specify).

Leave all check boxes blank.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

1.112 We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Paragraph 15.74

Consultation Question 85.

1.113 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

1.114 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.115 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

(1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and

(2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

1.116 We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.117 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

1.120 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of their experience of applying to register a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement as a British citizen and obtaining a passport for the child. Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Consultation Question 94.

1.123 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

1.125 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or

(2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.126 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.127 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

1.128 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.129 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.130 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.131 We provisionally propose that:

1.132 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.133 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.134 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.135 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.137 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and

(2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself.

There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.144 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.145 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.146 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

(1) when the child was born;

(2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;

(3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and

(4) whether they are a:

(c) female same-sex couple;

(d) single woman; or

(e) single man.

1.149 We invite consultees to tell us what they have paid for, or to provide evidence about the cost of:

(1) medical screening; and

1.150 We invite legal consultees, who advise on surrogacy and parental order proceedings, to provide evidence of what they would charge:

(1) to provide advice sufficient to meet the proposed requirement for independent legal advice discussed in Chapter 13; and

Paragraph 18.8

Consultation Question 113.

1.151 We invite consultees to tell us of the impact of:

(1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and

(2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:

(a) in the new pathway;

(b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or

(c) in both situations.

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.156 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.157 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Chapter 6: The parental order procedure

8 Consultation Question 1:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

International and domestic surrogacy arrangements present opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are the most serious human rights issues and therefore should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge.
There have already been convictions in Australia of men who commissioned surrogate pregnancies for the purpose of sexual abuse and exploitation, and carried out the most serious and abuse of those children.

Please provide your views below:

International and domestic surrogacy arrangements present opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are the most serious human rights issues and therefore should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge.
Under no circumstances would it be appropriate to have such cases dealt with by lay judges.

10 Consultation Question 3: We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Please provide your views below:

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority after the birth of the child and that the child's best interests are paramount consideration. These are decisions that should never be "automatic" and all options should be open.

12 Consultation Question 5: We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the Family Procedure Rules 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise. Chapter 8: Legal Parenthood: Proposals for Reform - A New Pathway

14 Consultation Question 7:

No

Please provide your views below:

I strongly disagree with this proposal.
It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require that the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent in giving up the child must be freely given. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements both in an international and domestic context.
This proposal would set a dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children, and all of the implications need to be understood. There is no evidence that the Law Commissioners have considered these more general implications fully if at all.
I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the ‘intended parents’ legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some ‘surrogate’ mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.
Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some ‘surrogate’ mothers say they want or not.

On a personal level, as a mother, it is grotesquely unreasonable to expect a (probably working class) postpartum woman, suffering the physical and psychological effects of just having given birth, to find a lawyer and make application to a court to assert her rights to the child in the short time allowed. The practical effect of this is to strip her of all rights to her own child, and deny her any right of redress.

I disagree with the proposals for the "new pathway".

18 Consultation Question 11:

No

Please provide your views below:

profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.
The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

21 Consultation Question 14:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.
The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.
The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.
In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.
The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

22 Consultation Question 15:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'
There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.
However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

23 Consultation Question 16:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

24 Consultation Question 17: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.Do consultees agree?

25 Consultation Question 18: For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

26 Consultation Question 19:

No

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable

28 Consultation Question 21: We invite consultees' views as to: (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

Please provide your views below:

I do not agree to a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

29 Consultation Question 22:

I do not agree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.
The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

30 Consultation Question 23:

Please provide your views below:

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

32 Consultation Question 25: We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Please provide your views below:

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

33 Consultation Question 26:

No

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.
I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.
Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

34 Consultation Question 27:

I disagree with the proposals for the ‘new pathway’. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol

40 Consultation Question 33:

No

Please provide your views below:

Surrogacy organisations whether "not for profit" or profit making, will driven by financial considerations, the need to cover costs and salaries and the desire to expand into recruiting more women to become surrogates.
The consultation references surrogacy as being comparable to prostitution in that it is exploitation of female biology for the profit and benefit of others, at high cost to women ; the surrogacy organisation in this model is a state sanctioned pimp.

Other

Please provide your views below:

It is abhorrent that any organisation or person should derive profit or payment of wages from the exploitation of women and the sale and trafficking of children.

Other

Please provide your views below:

This is window dressing. We known that money corrupts; the organisation will have a direct conflict of interest with securing the rights, health and wellbeing of women and children. This has been the experience in every other country. The wishes and desires of the commissioning persons will inevitably be prioritised over the safety and wellbeing of the mother and baby.
We do not allow commercial harvesting of organs for transplant, for this reason. Only the poor and marginalised would consider selling those organs, and it is they who will suffer injury and death as a consequence. So it is with surrogacy and commercial surrogacy in particular. You cannot reasonably expect the organisation to police their own practices. .

I would also add that it is nonsense to propose that an organisation self regulate; the wishes of those commissioning parents will be prioritised over the safety and well being of women.

42 Consultation Question 35: We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

Whether non-profit or not, they will be driven by financial imperatives to cover costs, salaries and outlays.
Senior staff will be aware that maximising income, expanding operations, increasing the numbers of surrogate pregnancies, will result in higher salaries for themselves and increase their own personal profiles.
Organisations will measure their success by the number of surrogate pregnancies commissioned.
Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

43 Consultation Question 36: We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

44 Consultation Question 37: We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

45 Consultation Question 37: We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

46 Consultation Question 38: We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

Please provide your views below:

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

47 Consultation Question 39: We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood. Do consultees agree?

49 Consultation Question 41: We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

50 Consultation Question 42: We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Chapter 10: Children's Access to Information About Surrogacy Arrangements

51 Consultation Question 43: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18. Do consultees agree?

52 Consultation Question 44: We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

53 Consultation Question 45: We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

Please provide your views below:

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

54 Consultation Question 46: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.Do consultees agree?

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins.
However, the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

56 Consultation Question 48: We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

Chapter 11: Eligibility Criteria for a Parental Order

62 Consultation Question 54: We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished. Do consultees agree?

67 Consultation Question 59:

No

Please provide views below:

I disagree with the new pathway. A genetic link must be retained. Surrogacy is never a "medical necessity".

Please provide views below:

If there is no genetic link, the surrogacy is not more than the creation of a child for adoption. It is likely to be an attempt to circumvent the rigorous safeguarding and assessment procedures that accompany adoption, or an attempt to "breed" a child to the personal preferences of the commissioning parents, which is abhorrent.
I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

Yes

Please provide views below:

68 Consultation Question 60: We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.

69 Consultation Question 61: We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide views below:

There is never a medical necessity for a surrogacy.
There must be a genetic link to the child for a parental order; if not, an adoption can be sought and would require to be assessed for suitability in the same way as all adoptions are.

Yes

Please provide your views below:

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

72 Consultation Question 64:

No

Please provide your views below:

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate. At 18, the brain is not fully formed, and in particular is unlikely to have fully mature decision making abilities.

73 Consultation Question 65:

Other

Please provide your views below:

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?
In addition to that, the woman must have given birth before. How can a woman of 18 who has never given birth have any understanding of what is involved, and how she is likely to experience bonding with the baby and the pain of giving it up?

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the ‘new pathway’.
I would add that no woman entering a surrogacy agreement is acting in a place of informed consent as she does not how she will experience the pregnancy and birth and the giving up of her child to persons she may barely know or even may never have met.
Applying commercial contractual considerations to a human life and the intimate human processes of pregnancy and birth is disrespectful to women and contrary to human dignity.

Screening will be of limited value. It is estimated that those convicted of sex offences against children have on average offended 20 times before they are caught and prosecuted.
Surrogacy is an attractive pathway for men who wish to procure a child for abuse. As there is no mother or maternal relatives to protect the child, and the adoption safeguarding and screening is absent from the proposed "new pathway". Two men in Australia have already been convicted of the most serious sexual abuse of babies and children acquired through surrogacy for that purpose. Even with criminal record screening, the same issues are likely to arise.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple ‘surrogate’ pregnancies and childbirths. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women’s reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.
There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.
I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

87 Consultation Question 79:

Please provide your views below:

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.
Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.
Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.
Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.
Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).
How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?
Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".
The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.
All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.
I notice that at least one woman has already died giving birth to a surrogate baby, leaving her own children orphaned. Natasha Caltabiano died giving birth as a surrogate for a couple aged 48 and 42 who already had 5 children of their own. This should never have been allowed to happen.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Please provide your views below:

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

115 Consultation Question 107:

Please provide your views below:

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.
All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.
Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.
It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.
Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.
The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself. There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.
At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties

Please provide your views below:

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.
All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.
The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

Please provide your views below:

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

116 Consultation Question 108: We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

Please provide your views below:

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy

arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.
It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.
If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.
It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.
It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.
It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.
Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.
UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.
The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:
Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
 Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
 Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.

 All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.

 The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."

 Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.

 Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

(1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

(2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

(1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and

(2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration.

Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

(1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;

(2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or

(3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

(1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,

(2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and

(3) met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

1.12 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;

(2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and

(3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

(1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;

(2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and

(3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;

(2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and

(3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

(1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;

(2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and

(3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.17 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

(1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and

(2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.19 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Paragraph 8.77

Consultation Question 17.

1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

1.21 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

1.22 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

1.23 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

(1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:

(a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and

(b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or

(2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

1.24 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

(1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;

(2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and

(3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.25 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and

(2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.26 We invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and

(2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:

(a) administrative, or

(b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.27 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and

(2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.28 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and

(2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.29 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

(1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and

(2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.31 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and

(2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify a measure that contravenes recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.32 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the 'intended parents' should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women's reproductive capacities.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.33 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

(2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.140

Consultation Question 30.

1.34 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

1.35 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

N/A

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.36 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.37 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.38 We provisionally propose that:

(1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

(2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.39 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

(1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;

(2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;

(3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;

(4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and

(5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

LEAVE ALL CHECK BOXES BLANK (i.e. none of the above)

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.40 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.42 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.44 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.45 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.46 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.47 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

1.48 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

1.49 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

1.50 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

1.51 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.52 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.53 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.54 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.55 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.56 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.57 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;

(2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:

(a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and

(b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and

(3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

1.59 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.60 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

(1) where his or her legal parents have consented;

(2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or

(3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

1.62 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.63 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.64 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

(1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or

(2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.65 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.66 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.67 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

(2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

(a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or

(b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and

(3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.68 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.69 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.70 We invite consultees' views on whether:

(1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or

(2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

1.71 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

1.72 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

(1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but

(2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.73 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

1.74 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 12.64

Consultation Question 60.

1.75 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.76 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.77 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

(1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or

(2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.79 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.80 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

(1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or

(2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.81 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.82 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.83 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood.

I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.84 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.85 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.86 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for a 'new pathway'. At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.87 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.88 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

(1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and

(2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.90 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.91 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

(1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;

(2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and

(3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.92 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.94 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

(1) based on an allowance;

(2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or

(3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and

(2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.29

Consultation Question 76.

1.99 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

(1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or

(2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.101 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

(1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and

(2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

(1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;

(2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or

(3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.103 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

(1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or

(2) left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.105 We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and

(2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. (check box)

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

(1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or

(2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

(1) no other payments;

(2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;

(3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;

(4) lost earnings;

(5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or

(6) gifts.

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to make any type of fee or payment to the birth mother for her 'services'.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.110 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

(1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;

(2) to any miscarriage or termination; or

(3) some other period of time (please specify).

Leave all check boxes blank.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

1.112 We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Paragraph 15.74

Consultation Question 85.

1.113 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

1.114 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.115 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

(1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and

(2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

1.116 We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.117 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

1.124 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.125 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or

(2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.126 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.130 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.131 We provisionally propose that:

1.132 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.133 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.134 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.135 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.137 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and

(2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself.

There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.144 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.145 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.146 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

(1) when the child was born;

(2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;

(3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and

Consultation Question 112.

1.149 We invite consultees to tell us what they have paid for, or to provide evidence about the cost of:

(1) medical screening; and

(where possible separating out the cost of such screening, tests or implications counselling from any other costs involved with fertility treatment).

N/A

1.150 We invite legal consultees, who advise on surrogacy and parental order proceedings, to provide evidence of what they would charge:

(1) to provide advice sufficient to meet the proposed requirement for independent legal advice discussed in Chapter 13; and

N/A

Paragraph 18.8

Consultation Question 113.

1.151 We invite consultees to tell us of the impact of:

(1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and

(2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:

(a) in the new pathway;

(b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or

(c) in both situations.

(1) their profession; and

(2) what they would charge to provide such a service.

(2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

Paragraph 18.15

Consultation Question 116.

1.155 We ask consultees who are intended parents to tell us:

(1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;

(2) what they spent, in total, on the surrogacy arrangement(s) that led to the birth of their child(ren), including the cost of fertility treatment, payments to the surrogate and payments to any surrogacy agency or organisation;

(3) how they raised the funds for the surrogacy arrangement(s);

(4) what they spent on any fertility treatment prior to entering into a surrogacy arrangement (where that treatment did not lead to the birth of a child); and

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.156 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.157 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

> Good afternoon
> I have submitted my main response to the consultation, but here are some additional thoughts.

> The consultation appears to be aimed at those who would directly gain from surrogacy, either financially or through gaining the child they very much want. But this runs the risk of some of the adverse consequences of surrogacy not being analysed, let alone given due weight in law. The consultation should begin with the fundamental question of whether surrogacy is ethical and if so, in what circumstances.
> Legislation should not be written with the ideal scenario in mind i.e. a surrogacy arrangement where there is mutual respect and agreement between all parties, and the process goes without a hitch. Instead, legislation should protect the most vulnerable parties, especially in less than ideal scenarios. The proposed new pathway fails to do this and is a step backwards for children's and women's rights
> The most vulnerable party in a surrogacy arrangement is the child and they have no choice in the matter. The welfare of the child should be paramount.
> By transferring parental responsibility to the commissioning parents at birth, the baby may be denied contact with his or her birth mother. Newborn babies become familiar with their mother's voice and heartbeat during pregnancy, and once born, they also find her smell comforting. Newborn babies have a strong instinct to stay close to their birth mothers (regardless of whether they are genetically-related) and separation is stressful, with possible long-term adverse effects for the child.
> It's possible that some surrogacy arrangements would be less detrimental to the child than others. For example, an altruistic arrangement between two sisters, who both play an important ongoing role in the child's life, might prove to be less traumatic than a commercial arrangement in which the child never sees their birth mother following the transfer of parental responsibility. In the latter situation, children born to surrogate mothers would also have to deal with the difficult truth that their birth mother carried them, gave birth to them and gave them up in return for a sum of several thousand pounds. More research is needed into the long-term effects of surrogacy on the child and this should be central to any new legislation. In the consultation questions discussing the transfer of parental responsibility, I have not seen any mention whatsoever of how the process might be made easier for the child.
> Surrogate mothers also need protection from exploitative surrogacy arrangements. Fertility treatment, pregnancy, birth and the post-natal period are extremely vulnerable times in a women's life. The proposed new pathway does not recognise this and expects mothers who change their mind about giving up their babies to make a legal objection to the court within five weeks of the birth. This shows a complete lack of understanding of the physical and emotional challenges many women face when recovering from childbirth, plus the surrogacy arrangement is likely to put severe pressure on women who are having doubts.
> There also needs to be consideration of the fact that IVF pregnancies (especially those involving donor eggs) tend to be higher risk for both mothers and children than natural pregnancies.
> Commercial surrogates tend to be vulnerable in other ways, too. They are usually in a much weaker financial position than the commissioning parents and tend also to have lower levels of education. The financial agreement itself creates a power imbalance, and in practice makes it more difficult for the surrogate mother to assert her rights or to express her concerns.
> I strongly believe that commercial surrogacy is always unethical and should not be legal in the UK. It is exploitative and contrary to human dignity in the same way that selling kidneys from live donors would be. In fact, selling one's kidney is arguably more ethical, as the process does not involve an additional human being who cannot consent.
> I understand that the UK government is concerned about British commissioning parents entering into exploitative or poorly-regulated surrogacy arrangements abroad. However, the solution should be to tighten up the laws that allow intended parents to "buy" these children abroad and bring them back to the UK. It would not be ethical to water down UK laws designed to protect children, in order to make UK surrogacy more attractive to intended parents.
> The proposed new pathway will benefit solicitors, agencies, private fertility clinics and intended parents, including those who want to bypass the adoption process. It would be detrimental to children, vulnerable or impoverished women and the NHS.
> Yours faithfully

Chapter 6: The parental order procedure

8 Consultation Question 1:

No

Please provide your views below:

Participants who pursued surrogacy overseas had been able to establish their parental rights within those countries, and source all the necessary paperwork to gain the child's entry into the UK. Participants felt that the level of court involvement back in the UK was unnecessary and there could be an easier and quicker means by which their legal parental status could be recognised within the UK.

Yes

Many participants in my study felt that there should be a “presumption in favour of the intended parents”, whilst still offering “some protection for the surrogate”. Participants were in agreement that a “reversal of the current situation” would be beneficial in which intended parents were recognised as the legal parents but surrogates have the right to contest this within a defined time period.

Yes

Please provide your views below:

My study participants recognised a need to balance the rights of all parties involved in the surrogacy arrangement and suggested that the surrogates retain the right to contest this arrangement but wanted to see their legal parentage established as soon after the birth as possible, as the child was in their care at that time.

Participants in my study were concerned about another man being legally recognised as the legal parent of the child. Men had specifically looked for a woman who was single, to be their surrogate, to safeguard against her spouse or civil partner being registered as a legal parent. This concern regarding a lack of recognition of the intended father as the genetic parent often took precedence over other selection criteria when looking for a surrogate. This proposal is to be welcomed.

Participants emphasised the importance of the intended parents being seen as the "true parents" throughout the surrogacy journey and in all scenarios.

24 Consultation Question 17: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

There was a consensus amongst my participants that the surrogate should have parental responsibility "up until the baby was born" and that parental responsibility be switched to the intended parents directly after birth, who will be caring for the child, with some caveat whereby the surrogate could flag any concerns within a stated time period.

Chapter 9: The Regulation of Surrogacy Arrangements

37 Consultation Question 30: We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

The participants in my study who chose a traditional surrogacy arrangement reported feeling as vulnerable during the process as those intended parents who chose a gestational surrogacy, and would have liked more support and legal protection during the process. The proposed new pathway provides an equitable approach and pathway for all intended parents.

38 Consultation Question 31: We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. The lack of any UK regulation in relation to surrogacy arrangements was a concern for the majority of participants. The intended parents I interviewed felt very vulnerable during the surrogacy process, and wanted to see changes brought about that would safeguard their rights. Participants commented that “it doesn’t matter what forms you fill in, whatever you agree isn’t legally binding which is quite scary”. Participants were concerned that at the end of the surrogacy process the surrogate could change her mind and “keep the baby, which is massively unfair”. All my study participants were concerned about current surrogacy contracts being unenforceable. However, whilst this was a key area of concern that they felt needed to be addressed, they were undecided about what changes could realistically be made to offer them the protection they wanted whilst not being seen to exploit the surrogate in any way.

50 Consultation Question 42: We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

The data collection period for my part-time PhD study was 2012-2014 when fewer gay men were seeking surrogacy in the UK, than reported in recent trends. However, at that time there was a general perception amongst my participants that there were very few surrogates available in the UK, and as the UK surrogacy laws prevented surrogates advertising their services, and intended parents advertising their need for a surrogate, the participants had difficulty identifying how they might make contact with potential surrogates. This restriction on advertising to find a surrogate, and the extended time the men anticipated this might take, was often reported as the reason for some participants to decide on an international surrogacy arrangement. Removing the current restrictions on advertising in relation to surrogacy arrangements is welcomed.

Whilst the participants in my study acknowledged the complex legal issues involved with a surrogacy arrangement, and wanted to ensure that surrogates were also fully informed of their legal situation, not all men sought professional legal advice. The additional expense associated with employing lawyers for UK surrogacy seemed to have influenced men's decisions whether to access professional legal support. However, many men were resourceful in accessing informal legal advice through websites and attending surrogacy and parenting conferences.

The legal consultation requirements prior to signing an agreement, and associated costs needs be clear and transparent.

Participants in my study acknowledged that money does "change hands" during non-commercial surrogacy arrangements, and were happy to pay an agreed amount for help in creating their family.

However, there were mixed views about the level / type of payment. Some participants felt that being able to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy arrangement was acceptable, and may encourage more women to offer to be surrogates, and result in the UK providing more legislation / regulation around surrogacy, which was seen as a positive move forward. However, other participants reported concerns that if surrogacy became more "commercial", the costs may become unaffordable for many intended parents.

A key recommendation from my study, based on my participants' experiences, was the need for more accessible, impartial and accurate guidance on surrogacy as a path to parenthood, In particular, clearer guidance on the documents required to exit the surrogacy destination country, who to contact to obtain this information, and the possible time allowances for collecting and validating this required documentation. Guidance on how long parents such expect to stay in the overseas country in order to obtain passports and visas to be able to return home would also be beneficial, as well as practical advice on having help with childcare arrangements whilst attending these appointments.

Question No.	Consultation Question
Q1	Consultation Question 7. In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have: (1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth, (2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and (3) met eligibility requirements, on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q1	YES
Q2	Consultation Question 11. We provisionally propose that:

	(1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child; (2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and (3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q2	YES
Q3	Consultation Question 12. We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that: (1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child; (2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and (3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q3	YES
Q4	Consultation Question 15. We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.
Your Response to Q4	YES
Q5	Consultation Question 27.

	We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway: (1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and (2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q5	YES
Q6	Consultation Question 28. We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q6	YES
Q7	Consultation Question 29. For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and (2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.
Your Response to Q7	No
Q8	Consultation Question 55. We provisionally propose that: (1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available; (2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

	(a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or (b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and (3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q8	YES
Q9	Consultation Question 30. We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q9	This might pose a problem in term sof the surrogate changing her mind, due to an emotional attachment to the baby. I don't agree with traditional surrogacy.
Q10	Consultation Question 32. We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway. We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.
Your Response to Q10	I think independent surrogacy would work if the surrogate is a family member or a close firned, howveer with strangers this would increase the risk of the intended parents being blackmailed financially or emotionally by the surrogate threatening to keep the child. This would put the intended parents in a vulnerable position.
Q11	Consultation Question 67. We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway: (1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and (2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15. Do consultees agree?

Your Response to Q11	I think single surrogate mothers would be preferable, however this would reduce the number of surrogate mothers available. Therefore, yes, counseleling would be agood idea.
Q12	Consultation Question 68. We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q12	YES
Q13	Consultation Question 88. We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q13	Only if a third party organisation or lawyers are involved.
Q14	Consultation Question 42. We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q14	Not sure about this. I think there must be a safe place for advertisement, or else both surrogates and intended parents will be ina vulnerable position of being tartgeted by the small minded public and even exploited.
Q15	Consultation Question 62. We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity: (1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or (2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made. We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

Your Response to Q15	More than 4 IVF failures, absence of uterus and underlying medical condition that endangers the life of the intended mother.
Q16	Consultation Question 70. We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.
Your Response to Q16	YES
Q17	Consultation Question 33. We provisionally propose that: (1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations; (2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and (3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q17	1
Q18	Consultation Question 35. We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q18	YES
Q19	Consultation Question 37. We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.
Your Response to Q19	YES
Q20	Consultation Question 59.

	We provisionally propose that the new pathway – (1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but (2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements. We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q20	YES
Q21	Consultation Question 46. We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q21	YES
Q22	Consultation Question 47. We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that: (1) the register should be maintained by the Authority; (2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include: (a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and

	(b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and (3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q22	Yes to both.
Q23	Consultation Question 48. We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.
Your Response to Q23	Yes
Q24	Consultation Question 49. We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances: (1) where his or her legal parents have consented; (2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or (3) in any other circumstances.
Your Response to Q24	Yes to both.
Q25	Consultation Question 51. We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so. Do consultees agree?

	We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.
Your Response to Q25	Yes
Q26	Consultation Question 52. We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so: (1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or (2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.
Your Response to Q26	Yes
Q27	Consultation Question 53. For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.
Your Response to Q27	Yes
Q28	Consultation Question 72. We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be: (1) based on an allowance; (2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or (3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.
Your Response to Q28	3
Q29	Consultation Question 73. We invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and

	(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".
Your Response to Q29	Yes to both
Q30	Consultation Question 74. We invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.
Your Response to Q30	Yes to both
Q31	Consultation Question 75. We invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and (2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.
Your Response to Q31	Yes to both
Q32	Consultation Question 76. We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).
Your Response to Q32	Yes
Q33	Consultation Question 77. We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings: (1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or (2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).
Your Response to Q33	Yes

Q34	Consultation Question 78. We invite consultees to share their experiences: (1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and (2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.
Your Response to Q34	Yes
Your Response to Q35	Yes and 2
Q36	Consultation Question 80. We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.
Your Response to Q36	Yes
Q37	Consultation Question 81.

	We invite consultees' views as to whether: (1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and (2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.
Your Response to Q37	Yes
Q38	Consultation Question 82. We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be: (1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or (2) a fixed fee set by the regulator. We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee: (1) no other payments; (2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy; (3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy; (4) lost earnings; (5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or (6) gifts.
Your Response to Q38	1 and this should be decided between IPs and surrogates.
Q39	Consultation Question 84. We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q39	Yes

Q40	Consultation Question 85. We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.
Your Response to Q40	Cant think of any.
Q41	Consultation Question 92. We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q41	Yes, if both parties agree.
Q42	Consultation Question 94. We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that: (1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or (2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.
Your Response to Q42	If both parties agree. Yes Yes

Q43	Consultation Question 95. We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q43	If both parties agree.
Q44	Consultation Question 97. We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q44	YES
Q45	Consultation Question 99. We provisionally propose that: the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q45	YES
Q46	Consultation Question 107. We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area. We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

	We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.
Your Response to Q46	The law must protect both the IPs and the surrogates, but it must also put the child's needs first. It would be good to have a law which states that when the IPs and surrogate agree before the process starts that the IPs will be the legal parents to the child born through surrogacy, then a contract will be drawn up and the surrogate cannot change their mind.

Chapter 6: The parental order procedure

8 Consultation Question 1:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

Please provide your views below:

9 Consultation Question 2:

Please provide your views below:

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and for this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

10 Consultation Question 3: We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Please provide your views below:

11 Consultation Question 4:

No

Please provide your views below:

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are of paramount consideration. Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

12 Consultation Question 5: We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the Family Procedure Rules 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise. Do consultees agree?

Chapter 8: Legal Parenthood: Proposals for Reform - A New Pathway

14 Consultation Question 7:

No

Please provide your views below:

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both international and domestic contexts.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, mothers and children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised above all.

I disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

Not Answered

Please provide your views below:

16 Consultation Question 9: We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

17 Consultation Question 10: We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

18 Consultation Question 11:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only six weeks and is shorter in Scotland. I cannot agree with the proposal to give the birth mother less than five weeks to object. The first six weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. During childbirth, the mother may experience significant blood loss leading to anaemia, and if she has a caesarean must then recover from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

OTHER
I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the proposal that 'intended parents' would acquire legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

21 Consultation Question 14:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interests. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time. Pregnancy, birth and post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that bond mothers to their newborn child, priming them for the enormous challenge of raising the infant to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge commitment to the child. Her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. Initial investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a newborn child and the long road of nurturing him or her to adulthood.

22 Consultation Question 15:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is reason enough for an outright rejection of this proposal.

It must not be overlooked that this proposal also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have implications for all children and all families. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of impacts on the rights of all mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment to date.

Yes

Please share your views below:

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

23 Consultation Question 16:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation.

The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

24 Consultation Question 17: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation.

The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

25 Consultation Question 18: For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

26 Consultation Question 19:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. T he birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

Please provide your views below:

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

27 Consultation Question 20:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

28 Consultation Question 21: We invite consultees' views as to: (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement.

The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

32 Consultation Question 25: We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Please provide your views below:

All surrogacy arrangements risk resulting in:

- the sale and/or trafficking of children
- the exploitation/coercion of the birth mother
- the exploitation of women's reproductive capabilities.

The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements.

There should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

33 Consultation Question 26:

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. But their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised above all.

42 Consultation Question 35: We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

43 Consultation Question 36: We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

46 Consultation Question 38: We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

Please provide your views below:

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

47 Consultation Question 39: We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood. Yes

Please provide your views below:

49 Consultation Question 41: We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I categorically disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

The idea of organisations charging to facilitate surrogacy is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution.

Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

50 Consultation Question 42: We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I vehemently disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

We are living in a time of increasing poverty and inequality, and as such it would be unethical to promote being a 'surrogate' mother as a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems.

If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely to present surrogacy adverts to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a ‘surrogate’ could provide a solution to any financial worries they are experiencing. The most disadvantaged young women in society would be hugely vulnerable to such advertising.

Once again, one must make plain the parallels between prostitution and surrogacy: both blatantly commodify women's bodies. They are harmful situations, both physically and psychologically, and and as such should never be advertised as a potential 'job' or 'choice' to girls and women.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. Advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Chapter 10: Children's Access to Information About Surrogacy Arrangements

51 Consultation Question 43: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18. Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the ‘new pathway’.

I do not agree that the ‘intended parents’ should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child’s best interests being of paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the ‘intended parents’ are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

53 Consultation Question 45: We invite consultees’ views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

Please provide your views below:

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform.

I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate.
Such proposals could lead to facilitating:

- the sale of children
- the erosion of mothers’ rights
- a diluting of the fundamental understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

54 Consultation Question 46: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court’s file for those parental order proceedings.Do consultees agree?

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that children resulting from a surrogacy process have access to information about their origins. The proposals in question 47 seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

56 Consultation Question 48: We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

63 Consultation Question 55:

72 Consultation Question 64:

No

Please provide your views below:

I am opposed to surrogacy and wish to see it banned, on the grounds that it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be made more accessible, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, the maximum age limit for 'intended parents' should be 40.

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

It is now widely understood, thanks to research by neuroscientists, that people do not fully mature until the age of 25. At age 18 the brain's prefrontal cortex, which helps us regulate and inhibit impulsive behaviour, is not yet fully developed. It's common knowledge that teenagers make ill-thought out decisions and allowing 18 year-olds to sign up to become surrogates is plainly not the action of a civilised society that undertakes to safeguard children and young adults.

73 Consultation Question 65:

Other

Please provide your views below:

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned on the grounds that it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

80 Consultation Question 72:

Please provide your views below:

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women’s reproductive functions, commodifies infants and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

87 Consultation Question 79:

Please provide your views below:

It is horrifying to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, while others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration well after childbirth, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Blood loss in childbirth due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and can potentially result in an emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified by researchers is a real risk to a mother receiving transfusions. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C-section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (or conversely, may present immediately after childbirth).

How could we possibly ensure that women suffering these complications are sufficiently compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post-natal depression and post-partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I am appalled that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive more financial compensation for surrogacy, having been through severe birth trauma.

All of the above illustrates just some of the physical and psychological risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Please provide your views below:

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

115 Consultation Question 107:

Please provide your views below:

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called 'altruistic' surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are wealthy or of high status. This in itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself. There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

Please provide your views below:

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

Please provide your views below:

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes and well-being of the birth mother and her child.

116 Consultation Question 108: We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

Please provide your views below:

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

126 Consultation Question 118: We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this Consultation Paper.

Please provide your views below:

It seems that, prior to designing this consultation, law commissioners had already decided to consider surrogacy a positive issue and that legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider WOMEN AS A CLASS to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It can be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, as they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

This consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and many vital questions – such as whether one thinks surrogacy can ever be considered ethical - are not posed at all.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

(1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

(2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

(1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and

(2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

(1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;

(2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or

(3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

(1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,

(2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and

(3) met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

1.12 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;

(2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and

(3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

(1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;

(2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and

(3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;

(2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and

(3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

(1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;

(2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and

(3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.17 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

(1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and

(2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.19 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Paragraph 8.77

Consultation Question 17.

1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

1.21 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

1.22 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

1.23 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

(1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:

(a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and

(b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or

(2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

1.24 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

(1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;

(2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and

(3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.25 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and

(2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.26 We invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and

(2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:

(a) administrative, or

(b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.27 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and

(2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.28 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and

(2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.29 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

(1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and

(2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.31 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and

(2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.32 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the 'intended parents' should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women's reproductive capacities.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.33 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

(2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Consultation Question 30.

1.34 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

1.35 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

N/A

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.36 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.37 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.38 We provisionally propose that:

(1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

(2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.39 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

(1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;

(2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;

(3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;

(4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and

(5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

LEAVE ALL CHECK BOXES BLANK (i.e. none of the above)

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.40 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.42 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.44 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.45 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.46 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.47 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

1.48 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

1.49 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

1.50 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

1.51 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.52 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.53 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.54 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.55 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.56 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.57 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;

(2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:

(a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and

(b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and

(3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

1.59 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.60 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

(1) where his or her legal parents have consented;

(2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or

(3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

1.62 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.63 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.64 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

(1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or

(2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.65 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.66 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.67 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

(2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

(a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or

(b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and

(3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.68 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.69 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.70 We invite consultees' views on whether:

(1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or

(2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

1.71 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

1.72 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

(1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but

(2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.73 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

1.74 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 12.64

Consultation Question 60.

1.75 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.76 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.77 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

(1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or

(2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.79 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.80 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

(1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or

(2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.81 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.82 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.83 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood.

I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.84 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.85 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.86 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.87 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.88 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

(1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and

(2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.90 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.91 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

(1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;

(2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and

(3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.92 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.94 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

(1) based on an allowance;

(2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or

(3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and

(2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.29

Consultation Question 76.

1.99 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

(1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or

(2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.101 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

(1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and

(2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

(1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;

(2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or

(3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.103 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

(1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or

(2) left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.105 We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and

(2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. (check box)

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

(1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or

(2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

(1) no other payments;

(2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;

(3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;

(4) lost earnings;

(5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or

(6) gifts.

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to make any type of fee or payment to the birth mother for her 'services'.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.110 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

(1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;

(2) to any miscarriage or termination; or

(3) some other period of time (please specify).

Leave all check boxes blank.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

1.112 We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Paragraph 15.74

Consultation Question 85.

1.113 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

1.114 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.115 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

(1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and

(2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

1.116 We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.117 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

1.118 We invite overseas surrogates (or bodies representing or advocating for surrogates) to share with us their experiences f international surrogacy arrangements.

Paragraph 16.10

Paragraph 16.12

Consultation Question 91.

1.120 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of their experience of applying to register a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement as a British citizen and obtaining a passport for the child. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have about causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.53

Consultation Question 93.

1.122 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. Paragraph 16.68

Consultation Question 94.

1.123 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport before the child is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

1.124 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.125 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or

(2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.126 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.127 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

1.128 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.129 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.130 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.131 We provisionally propose that:

1.132 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.133 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.134 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.135 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.137 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and

(2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself.

There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.144 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.145 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.156 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.157 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Our practitioners see a wide range of international surrogacy arrangements and feel that not all of them need to be before a high court judge. We support greater flexibility, with the option for more complex cases to be transferred if needed.

9 Consultation Question 2:

Please provide your views below:

Under current arrangements, we support parental order cases being heard by lay justices as complex cases are rare and there is the opportunity for cases to be transferred if needed.

If the new pathway is introduced, judges will be seeing more complex cases that have been contested or have not used the pathway, and there could therefore be an argument for these cases to be heard at a higher level.

10 Consultation Question 3: We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

18 Consultation Question 11:

Other

Please provide your views below:

We have some concerns about the period in which to raise objections. The proposed timeframe is the opposite of current legislation, whereby the surrogate's consent is only valid when it is given at least six weeks after the child's birth. Our practitioners are concerned about the scale of this proposed change and the impact it may have on the child's welfare where there are medical complications or the surrogate experiences mental ill health. One option could be to extend the registration period for children who are born through surrogacy.

19 Consultation Question 12:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Yes, we agree this would be in the best interests of the child.

21 Consultation Question 14:

Other

Please provide your views below:

We are cautious about completely removing the post-birth assessment.

The current post-birth parental order process allows for a child-led decision and analysis by a qualified social worker, involving the child, intended parent(s) and surrogate. Our practitioners can meet with the intended parent(s) with their child to see the interaction, as well as ensure that the surrogate continues to consent freely and unconditionally.

We would welcome further information on the pre-conception assessment and the qualifications and training required for the person undertaking this assessment. We recommend this person should be a qualified social worker.

22 Consultation Question 15:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

We agree that the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should not continue to be the child's legal parent or a respondent, and that this should be the case in any new pathway and outside of the pathway.

There would need to be a specific reference to the child not being a child of the family and that presumption being overturned in cases of surrogacy.

24 Consultation Question 17: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.Do consultees agree?

25 Consultation Question 18: For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

Please provide your views below:

We agree that the parental order route is an appropriate route and would allow for a child-led assessment.

We agree with amending section 10 to allow intended parent(s) to apply for section 8 orders.

There would need to be some sort of administrative process to provide the evidence that they intend to apply for a parental order. 35 Consultation Question 28: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.Do consultees agree?

36 Consultation Question 29:

Please provide your views below:

The current law says that each person can act unilaterally in relation to most decisions about a child. The only instance where this may cause a problem would be if the parent(s) wanted to circumcise the child or wanted to agree to major medical treatment and the surrogate objected. Should this happen, it would be resolved through existing court processes.

Chapter 9: The Regulation of Surrogacy Arrangements

37 Consultation Question 30: We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Yes, it's in the child's interests to be supported by the new pathway, with the intended parent(s) and surrogate have access to appropriate advice and support.

38 Consultation Question 31: We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

Please provide your views below:

39 Consultation Question 32:

Please provide your views below:

It's in the child's interests to be supported by the new pathway, with the intended parent(s) and surrogate having access to appropriate advice and support.

There will always be people who make arrangements outside of any pathway or agency, but introducing a new process provides an opportunity to consider how best to engage parents and potential surrogates. The new pathway would be offering more than the parental order process in terms of security and support during the pregnancy, which should be seen as advantageous to both the intended parent(s) and surrogate. But people with independent arrangements may still prefer a parental order if it is cheaper or if they feel secure in the independent arrangements they have made.

Chapter 10: Children's Access to Information About Surrogacy Arrangements

51 Consultation Question 43: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

We recommend being open with children about their origins from the beginning, though recognise this is a decision for each parent to make.

52 Consultation Question 44: We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement. We agree with the addition of habitual residence and would recommend a qualifying period of six months.

65 Consultation Question 57:

Please provide your views below:

We consider that the qualifying categories should not be removed as the intention is for the applicants to be parents. However, the act could usefully define who would come within the definition of an enduring family relationship and include two people who decide to co-parent. The birth of the child should be in as secure an arrangement as possible and an enduring family relationship should be evidenced by the applicants.

66 Consultation Question 58: We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them. Do consultees agree?

A genetic link is a crucial part of surrogacy arrangements and guards against potential exploitative reasons for creating a child. Removing this genetic connection is a fundamental shift and would potentially put the surrogacy assessment process at odds with the more thorough process for fostering or adopting a non-genetically linked child.

We would welcome further information on the scenarios the Law Commission intends this to provide for, and whether there are any potential unintended consequences.

68 Consultation Question 60: We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order. Do consultees agree?

Yes

69 Consultation Question 61: We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order. Do consultees agree?

If this were to be considered it would need to be subject to the other parent's consent as it would have an impact on the child to know that the parent did not consent to their birth.

We would welcome further information on the process for undertaking these checks as we know from our experience that risks may be identified as part of the parental order assessment process. There would need to be a simple procedure for obtaining an enhanced criminal record certificate and a decision on who, in the surrogacy process, the records should be disclosed.

The surrogacy agency should ensure that the assessments are carried out by social workers who can properly assess risk arising from information from the criminal record check.

We agree that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake.

We have experience of surrogate parents commissioning multiple surrogacies at the same time/in short succession and suggest that the Law Commission considers a restriction on the number of concurrent commissions to ensure the welfare of the children.

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

(1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

(2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

(1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and

(2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

(1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;

(2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or

(3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

(1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,

(2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and

(3) met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

1.12 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;

(2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and

(3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

(1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;

(2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and

(3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;

(2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and

(3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

(1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;

(2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and

(3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.15 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

(1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and

(2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.17 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Paragraph 8.77

Consultation Question 17.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

1.19 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

1.21 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

(1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:

(a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and

(b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or

(2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

1.22 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

(1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;

(2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and

(3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.23 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and

(2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.24 We invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and

(2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:

(a) administrative, or

(b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.25 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and

(2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.26 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and

(2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.27 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.28 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

(1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and

(2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.29 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and

(2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the 'intended parents' should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women's reproductive capacities.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.31 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

(2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.140

Consultation Question 30.

1.32 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

1.33 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

N/A

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.34 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.35 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.36 We provisionally propose that:

(1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

(2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.37 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

(1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;

(2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;

(3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;

(4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and

(5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

LEAVE ALL CHECK BOXES BLANK (i.e. none of the above)

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.38 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.39 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.40 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving derive income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.42 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.44 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.45 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

1.46 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

1.47 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

1.48 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

1.49 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.50 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.51 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.52 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.53 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.54 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.55 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;

(2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:

(a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and

(b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and

(3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.56 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

1.57 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

(1) where his or her legal parents have consented;

(2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or

(3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

1.59 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

1.60 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.62 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

(1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or

(2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.63 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.64 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.65 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

(2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

(a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or

(b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and

(3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.66 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.67 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.68 We invite consultees' views on whether:

(1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or

(2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

1.69 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

1.70 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

(1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but

(2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.71 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

1.72 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 12.64

Consultation Question 60.

1.73 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.74 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.75 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

(1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or

(2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.76 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.77 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

(1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or

(2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.79 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.80 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.81 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.82 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.83 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.84 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.85 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.86 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.87 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

(1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and

(2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.88 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

(1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;

(2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and

(3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.90 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.91 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.92 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway. Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

(1) based on an allowance;

(2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or

(3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.94 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and

(2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.29

Consultation Question 76.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

(1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or

(2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.99 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

(1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and

(2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

(1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;

(2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or

(3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother compensation.

1.101 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother compensation.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

(1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or

(2) left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother compensation.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.103 We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and

(2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.105 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. (check box)

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

(1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or

(2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

(1) no other payments;
(2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;
(3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;
(4) lost earnings;
(5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or
(6) gifts.

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to make any type of fee or payment to the birth mother for her 'services'.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

(1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;

(2) to any miscarriage or termination; or

(3) some other period of time (please specify).

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

1.110 We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Paragraph 15.74

Consultation Question 85.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

1.112 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.113 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

(1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and

(2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

1.114 We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.115 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

Paragraph 15.99

Consultation Question 89.

1.116 We invite overseas surrogates (or bodies representing or advocating for surrogates) to share with us their experiences f international surrogacy arrangements.

Paragraph 16.10

Consultation Question 90.

1.117 We invite organisations focused on children's rights and welfare in the international context to share with us their views on our proposed reforms and consultation questions in this chapter.

Paragraph 16.12

Consultation Question 91.

1.118 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of their experience of applying to register a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement as a British citizen and obtaining a passport for the child. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have about causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

1.119 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.53

Consultation Question 93.

1.120 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.68

Consultation Question 94.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport before the child is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

1.122 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.123 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or

(2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.124 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.125 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

1.126 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.127 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.128 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.129 We provisionally propose that:

1.130 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.131 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.132 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.133 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.134 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.135 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and

(2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.137 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself. There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.144 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

(1) when the child was born;

(2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;

(3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and

(4) whether they are a:

(c) female same-sex couple;

(d) single woman; or

(e) single man.

Paragraph 18.6

Consultation Question 112.

1.147 We invite consultees to tell us what they have paid for, or to provide evidence about the cost of:

(1) medical screening; and

(2) implications counselling

N/A

1.148 We invite legal consultees, who advise on surrogacy and parental order proceedings, to provide evidence of what they would charge:

(1) to provide advice sufficient to meet the proposed requirement for independent legal advice discussed in Chapter 13; and

(2) to draft, advise on and negotiate the written surrogacy agreement required for the new pathway.

N/A

Paragraph 18.8

Consultation Question 113.

1.149 We invite consultees to tell us of the impact of:

(1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and

(2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:

(a) in the new pathway;

(b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or

(c) in both situations.

Paragraph 18.11

Consultation Question 114.

1.150 We invite consultees who consider that they might be able to fulfil the role of the independent professional discussed in Chapter 9 to tell us:

(1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;

(2) what they spent, in total, on the surrogacy arrangement(s) that led to the birth of their child(ren), including the cost of fertility treatment, payments to the surrogate and payments to any surrogacy agency or organisation;

(3) how they raised the funds for the surrogacy arrangement(s);

(4) what they spent on any fertility treatment prior to entering into a surrogacy arrangement (where that treatment did not lead to the birth of a child); and

(5) how they raised the funds for the fertility treatment.

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.154 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.155 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Chapter 6: The parental order procedure

8 Consultation Question 1:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Given the complexities inherent in international surrogacy arrangements and for the reasons set out by the High Court judges (para 6.38), international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court. Moreover, this should not have a negative impact on the workload of the High Court judiciary as it should be anticipated that the reform as a whole will lead to a reduction in the numbers of international surrogacy arrangements.

Please provide your views below:

9 Consultation Question 2:

Please provide your views below:

Both categories of domestic surrogacy cases which will continue to require a post-birth parental order (as set out in paras 6.44 and 6.45 respectively) should be treated in the same way and should be heard by circuit judges rather than a panel of lay justices. This will allow for building up expertise in surrogacy arrangements through the ticketing system, as noted in para 6.48.

10 Consultation Question 3: We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Please provide your views below:

11 Consultation Question 4:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

We support the proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them. However, should that proposal not be supported by consultees, then the court should consider whether to make an order granting the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings. The listing of the first directions hearing should be prompt.

12 Consultation Question 5: We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the Family Procedure Rules 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

13 Consultation Question 6:

Please provide your views below:

(2) If the proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees, then we support the above proposal that in Scotland it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit.

Chapter 8: Legal Parenthood: Proposals for Reform - A New Pathway

14 Consultation Question 7:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Agree. The proposed framework on legal parenthood, consisting of the new pathway to legal parenthood and the retention of the parental order procedure, represents a pragmatic compromise between the traditional approach to legal motherhood based on the gestational test and an indiscriminate use of the intent-based approach to legal parenthood.

15 Consultation Question 8:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Agree. The provision should also set out what should be included in the records, beyond a copy of the surrogacy arrangement (e.g. a record of the surrogate's post-birth objection if applicable).

100 years; or

Please provide your views below:

The proposed period of 100 years seems reasonable. As we understand it, this period is in line with the adoption legislation. It seems logical that, in the future, potential changes in the storage requirements for adoption records will be reflected in the area of surrogacy.

16 Consultation Question 9: We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

We believe that the use of anonymously donated gametes should be discouraged in any circumstances, including in traditional surrogacy arrangements. The rationale behind this is, as acknowledged in para 8.18, the importance to ensure that children (and adults) born through surrogacy have access to full information about their biological and genetic origins.

17 Consultation Question 10: We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

Given the need to strongly discourage the use of anonymously donated sperm for the reason stated above (see response to Question 10), the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

18 Consultation Question 11:

Other

Please provide your views below:

(1) We believe that the surrogate's position post-birth should be strengthened. Instead of affording the surrogate a right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood for the intended parent(s) within a specified period after birth, the surrogate should be required to actively confirm her consent post-birth.
(2) In order to keep the process relatively simple, the procedure could be administrative in nature. This could be by way of a consent form to be lodged with the court (an amended Form 101A). In the alternative, as we understand to be the practice in Israel, the surrogate could be asked by a neutral party (e.g. a trained social worker) to either confirm or revoke her consent to the establishment of legal parenthood for the intended parent(s).
(3) We find the proposed period for the right to object to be exercised too short. It is suggested that the period is to be set one week less than the relevant period for birth registration, meaning that in England the period would be 35 days and in Scotland only 14 days. This is disproportionately short, particularly in cases where the surrogate has experienced health complications following the birth and may not be able to take steps promptly to be informed of her rights and/or exercise her right to revoke her consent/exercise her right to object. In making these comments, we have given consideration to the proposal at 1.13 (Question 12).

19 Consultation Question 12:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

20 Consultation Question 13:

Other

Please provide your views below:

We query whether this proposal satisfactorily protects the interests of the surrogate. There may potentially be a conflict of interests between the surrogate and the intended parents. Therefore, it should not be left to the intended parents to make a declaration concerning the surrogate's capacity. Please see response to Question 11, in which we recommend an alternative approach whereby the surrogate would be required to actively confirm her consent to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood post-birth. (Should the surrogate lose capacity post-birth, the case should no longer proceed in the new pathway.)

21 Consultation Question 14:

Other

Please provide your views below:

We agree that in cases that fall under the new pathway there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his/her birth unless the court is seised to consider child arrangements or the establishment of legal parentage for an intended parent who would not be a legal parent under current law. However, in terms of how the welfare of the child should be assessed pre-conception, it seems to us that it would be helpful to have the active involvement of a trained social worker in this process to make an assessment.

22 Consultation Question 15:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Agree.

Other

Please share your views below:

Generally, in cases outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should not be regarded as the legal parent of the child as he/she has no connection to the child – on the basis of genetics, gestation or intent. Nevertheless, it may be appropriate not to remove the status of a legal parent at birth from the surrogate's spouse or civil partner in cases where there is no surrogacy agreement in place. In such cases, the general rules on legal parenthood should apply without exception. The policy should be to encourage best practice with all the safeguards that the new pathway proposes.

24 Consultation Question 17: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.Do consultees agree?

25 Consultation Question 18: For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

28 Consultation Question 21: We invite consultees' views as to: (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

Please provide your views below:

A temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases is a very attractive alternative to the proposed new pathway, and it would have been helpful if the consultation paper had explored this option in a more detail. The strength of this model is that it better reflects the factual reality of the situation and the child's origins – i.e. the surrogate being the legal parent on the basis of gestation (and potentially also genetics) and the intended parents being the legal parents on the basis of pre-conception intent (and potentially also genetics).

The legal parenthood of the surrogate could be extinguished through a relinquishment procedure that would involve a written consent by the surrogate given within a set period of time after the birth.

29 Consultation Question 22:

Please provide your views below:

UK families may move abroad and/or have other nationalities beyond being British. As the law of parentage does not join up internationally, we would hope that even if the conditions for the new pathway are satisfied, intended parents will still be able to apply for a post birth parental order as such an order may help to promote and protect the parent-child relationship status being recognised in other States.

30 Consultation Question 23:

Please provide your views below:

We see no reason to depart from the current checklist.

31 Consultation Question 24:

Please provide your views below:

We believe the following factors should be considered:

a. The parties' intentions when entering into the surrogacy agreement;
b. The child's genetic and gestational links to each of the parties to the surrogacy agreement;
c. The sibling relationships of the child;
d. The suitability of each of the parties to be fit and proper parent and/or carer of the child;
e. The ability of each of the parties to facilitate the child's relationships with other parties, should that be considered desirable;
f. The value of a stable family unit in the child's development;
g. The likely effect on the child, throughout the child's life, of the decision;
h. The likely effect of the decision on future generations;
i. The child's ascertainable wishes and feelings regarding the decision, taking account of the child's age and understanding;
j. The child's characteristics which are considered relevant, including age and sex;
k. The child's particular needs, including physical and health needs;
l. Any harm which the child has suffered or is at risk of suffering;
m. The child's emotional and/or physical attachment to each of the parties;
n. The likely psychological and emotional impact on the child of the decision;
o. The circumstances of the surrogacy agreement;
p. Potential involvement of illicit practices;
q. Transparency in financial transactions;
r. The role of intermediaries; and
s. Any other relevant consideration.

32 Consultation Question 25: We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Please provide your views below:

Yes, this would be a sensible amendment.

33 Consultation Question 26:

Other

Please provide your views below:

In principle agree, subject to the following two caveats:
1. under (2) the intended parents should be required to apply for a parental order rather than merely have the intention to apply for a parental order, and that there should be a monitoring mechanism in place to follow up whether an application for a parental order has indeed been made.
2. the proposal is unsuitable for those cases falling outside the new pathway where there is no written surrogacy agreement.

34 Consultation Question 27:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Agree. However, see above response to Question 26 concerning the condition that the intended parents 'intend' to apply for a parental order. We believe that this condition should be strengthened.

35 Consultation Question 28: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Agree.

36 Consultation Question 29:

Please provide your views below:

We do not feel that there is a need to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility. Should a dispute arise between the intended parents and the surrogate concerning the exercise of parental responsibility, this will be dealt with in the usual way: by mediation, failing which a court application.

Chapter 9: The Regulation of Surrogacy Arrangements

37 Consultation Question 30: We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Agree. The inclusion of traditional surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway may encourage parties to such arrangements not to act independently but instead engage with regulated surrogacy organisations.

38 Consultation Question 31: We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

Please provide your views below:

39 Consultation Question 32:

We believe that such person should be expected to have a child welfare/social work background. As such, they should have practical experience in the area of child and family work, and a knowledge of child welfare legislation.

45 Consultation Question 37: We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

We believe that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway otherwise activities of unregulated organisations would tacitly be encouraged.

46 Consultation Question 38: We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

Please provide your views below:

47 Consultation Question 39: We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood. 48 Consultation Question 40: We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms). Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Agree. This is critical in order to ensure that personal status does not become a matter of contract law. Legal parentage should continue to be established by operation of law or judicial determination.

Chapter 10: Children's Access to Information About Surrogacy Arrangements

51 Consultation Question 43: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Agree – we also suggest that there is a strong case for enabling them to do so earlier, on request by a parent and subject to safeguards (e.g. counselling).

52 Consultation Question 44: We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

No, disagree. Given the importance of birth certificates and the situations in which they are needed (in the UK and abroad), we are concerned that a surrogacy specific marker (as is currently the case on the long-form birth certificate) may prejudice the surrogate-born child. We believe that the policy of transparency in the arrangement so that the child has an opportunity to know their origins can be promoted through (a) a general statement on all birth certificates that other information may be held elsewhere e.g. on a Parental Order Register or HFEA Register and (b) educating intended parents on the importance of openness.

53 Consultation Question 45: We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

Please provide your views below:

Yes, as we feel that the historical reason for short and long-form birth certificates is now outdated. We would, however, caution against asking too much of the birth registration system. We believe there is room for consideration of the relationship between the GRO and the HFEA Register. The GRO could inform an applicant seeking information from the GRO that other information about them may be held elsewhere e.g. on a Parental Order Register or HFEA Register.

54 Consultation Question 46: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.Do consultees agree?

61 Consultation Question 53: For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Please provide your views below:

Yes, if such person is indicated as an intended parent in the surrogacy agreement.

Chapter 11: Eligibility Criteria for a Parental Order

62 Consultation Question 54: We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished. Do consultees agree?

Please provide your views below:

We agree with the policy objective, however, early applications should be encouraged. We say this so that (i) the duration of any limping legal parentage is limited in time and (ii) child protection concerns may only be picked once a POR is appointed. That being so, we would propose maintaining the time limit albeit with consideration given to a 'leave to apply' mechanism or a statutory power for the court to dispense with the time limit.

Chapter 12: Eligibility Criteria for Both a Parental Order and for the New Pathway

64 Consultation Question 56:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Agree. Additionally, we believe that the same jurisdictional filters should also apply to the surrogate mother. This will help to prevent situations where a woman with no prior connection to the UK is brought to this country for the sole purpose of surrogacy.

Please provide your views below:

For habitual residence, we believe there should be a qualifying period of residence of 1 year, in relation to both the intended parents and the surrogate (see above 1.68). This will hopefully deter 'reproductive travel'.

65 Consultation Question 57:

Please provide your views below:

(1) We do not believe that the qualifying categories of relationship in s 54(2) HFEA 2008 require reform. While there are difficulties inherent in establishing what is 'an enduring family relationship', the inclusion of such a category is significant from the child's perspective as it supports the importance of stable and lasting commitments and relationships. Although we appreciate that there are important differences between adoption and surrogacy as means of family building, it is to be noted that the qualifying categories of relationship in s 54(2) HFEA 2008 align with the categories of prospective adopters in Scotland under the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.
(2) Two persons who are in a prohibited degree of relationship with one another should continue to be excluded from applying jointly for a parental order.

66 Consultation Question 58: We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them. Do consultees agree?

Yes

67 Consultation Question 59:

No

Please provide views below:

No, we do not agree. We share the concern of the Department for Education that moves to bring even more people into the use of surrogacy arrangements has the potential to reduce further those considering adoption. Moreover, we believe it is important to maintain the distinction between surrogacy and adoption – both domestically and in international arrangements.

68 Consultation Question 60: We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order. 69 Consultation Question 61: We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order. We believe that there should be a maximum age limit for the grant of parental order. The age limit should take account of the probability that at least one of the intended parents could reasonably be expected to raise the child through to adulthood.

Please provide your views below:

We believe that there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents under the new pathways. A combined age of 100-110 years for couples and 50-55 years for single intended parents seems reasonable.

Other

Please provide your views below:

We believe that there should be a minimum age limit for intended parents, however, feel that it should be higher than 18 years (21, if not 25). Setting a reasonable minimum age limit will send the message that family building through surrogacy is a form of family building which requires additional consideration and preparation.

Please provide your views below:

We believe that the minimum age limit for the surrogate should be higher than 18 (at least 21, if not 25). Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Agree. In terms of the costs, the intended parents should be required to cover the costs of independent legal advice for the surrogate. It may be helpful to introduce an accreditation scheme for legal practitioners who wish to advise in this specialist field of law.

78 Consultation Question 70: We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

Pregnancy and labour are a major life event with potentially unexpected consequences – both physical and psychological. While every pregnancy is unique, we believe that for the consent to be informed a prior experience of pregnancy and birth is necessary. We believe that there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

79 Consultation Question 71: We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

We believe that there should be a maximum, partly on the grounds of the surrogate's physical and mental health in the immediate and longer term and partly to promote the underlying principle that surrogacy is provided on an altruistic basis.

Chapter 15: Payments to the Surrogate: Options for Reform

80 Consultation Question 72:

based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or

Please provide your views below:

In terms of the consultation questions regarding costs, we believe the policy should promote transparency and openness about the procedures and costs involved as this might encourage more UK based intended parents to pursue surrogacy in the UK. There should be a better definition of what constitutes a 'reasonable expense', recognising that the types/amounts of expenses will vary according to individual circumstances. We also believe that there should be clear guidance as to what types of payments are not acceptable (e.g. payment for the surrogacy arrangement itself).
On balance, we think (2) is realistic.

specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

Please provide your views below:

Compensation payments set out in (1) and (2) should not be allowed as they may disguise a payment for the transfer of the child. However, if a surrogate suffers complications such as those specified in (3), then payments to enable her to manage the immediate consequences of such complications should be permitted and should fall under 'reasonable expenses'.

Please provide your views below:

See above. Nevertheless, should compensation payments be introduced, then (1) seems more acceptable as allowing the parties to negotiate runs a higher risk of the compensation payment being moved to a fee payment level.

88 Consultation Question 80: We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

Please provide your views below:

Life insurance should be in place for the surrogate as part of the surrogacy agreement, payed for by the intended parents. No further compensation should be paid by the intended parents to the surrogate's family.

89 Consultation Question 81:

Please provide your views below:

We had mixed views. Intended parents should not be able to buy gifts for the surrogate as such gifts could undermine an altruistic policy. However, IPs and surrogates may build and wish to maintain relationships and it would be counter-productive to such relationships to prohibit gifts which are reasonable in nature.

90 Consultation Question 82:

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

Please provide your views below:

No. Payments for surrogacy services render surrogacy arrangements commercial and are difficult to distinguish from payments for the transfer of the child.

Please provide your views below:

In principle, we agree with this proposal, however, the practical application of the proposal is likely to be challenging for at least two reasons: 1.) What criteria will be used by the Secretary of State for the purpose of identifying qualifying jurisdictions (e.g. payments, enforceability of surrogacy arrangements, access to origins), and how will these criteria be assessed? For example, could a system which meets UK standards with regard to payments and enforceability but not access to origins qualify? 2.) What happens in case the laws in a qualifying jurisdiction change and standards drop as a consequence? Who will be tasked with monitoring the legal landscape in the qualifying jurisdictions? Given the disparity of laws (safeguards) which exist internationally, we believe these challenges can only be mitigated by way of a bi or multi-lateral convention.

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

(1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

(2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

(1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and

(2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

(1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;

(2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or

(3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

(1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,

(2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and

(3) met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

1.12 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;

(2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and

(3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

(1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;

(2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and

(3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;

(2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and

(3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

(1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;

(2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and

(3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.17 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

(1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and

(2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.19 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Paragraph 8.77

Consultation Question 17.

1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

1.21 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

1.22 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

1.23 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

(1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:

(a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and

(b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or

(2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

1.24 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

(1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;

(2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and

(3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.25 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and

(2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.26 We invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and

(2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:

(a) administrative, or

(b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.27 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and

(2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.28 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and

(2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.29 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

(1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and

(2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.31 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and

(2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify a measure that contravenes recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.32 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the 'intended parents' should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women's reproductive capacities.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.33 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

(2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.140

Consultation Question 30.

1.34 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

1.35 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

N/A

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.36 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.37 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.38 We provisionally propose that:

(1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.39 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

(1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;

(2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;

(3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;

(4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and

(5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

LEAVE ALL CHECK BOXES BLANK (i.e. none of the above)

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.40 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.42 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.44 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.45 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.46 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.47 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

1.48 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

1.49 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

1.50 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

1.51 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.52 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.53 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.54 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.55 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.56 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.57 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;

(2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:

(a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and

(b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and

(3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

1.59 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.60 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

(1) where his or her legal parents have consented;

(2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or

(3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

1.62 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.63 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.64 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

(1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or

(2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.65 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.66 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.67 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

(2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

(a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or

(b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and

(3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.68 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.69 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.70 We invite consultees' views on whether:

(1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or

(2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

1.71 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

1.72 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

(1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but

(2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.73 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

1.74 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 12.64

Consultation Question 60.

1.75 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.76 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.77 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

(1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or

(2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.79 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.80 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

(1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or

(2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.81 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.82 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.83 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood.

I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.84 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.85 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.86 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.87 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.88 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

(1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and

(2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.90 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.91 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

(1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;

(2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and

(3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.92 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.94 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

(1) based on an allowance;

(2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or

(3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and

(2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.29

Consultation Question 76.

1.99 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

(1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or

(2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.101 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

(1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and

(2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

(1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;

(2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or

(3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.103 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

(1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or

(2) left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.105 We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and

(2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

(1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or

(2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

(1) no other payments;

(2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;

(3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;

(4) lost earnings;

(5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or

(6) gifts.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.110 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

(1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;

(2) to any miscarriage or termination; or

(3) some other period of time (please specify).

Leave all check boxes blank.

Paragraph 15.72

1.114 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.115 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

(1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and

(2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

1.117 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.53

Consultation Question 93.

1.122 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.68

Consultation Question 94.

1.123 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport before the child is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

1.124 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.125 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or

(2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.126 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.127 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

1.128 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.129 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.130 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.131 We provisionally propose that:

1.132 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.133 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.134 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.135 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.137 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and

(2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself.

There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.144 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.145 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.146 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

(1) when the child was born;

(2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;

(3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and

(4) whether they are a:

(c) female same-sex couple;

(d) single woman; or

(e) single man.

Consultation Question 112.

1.149 We invite consultees to tell us what they have paid for, or to provide evidence about the cost of:

(1) medical screening; and

(2) implications counselling

(where possible separating out the cost of such screening, tests or implications counselling from any other costs involved with fertility treatment).

N/A

1.150 We invite legal consultees, who advise on surrogacy and parental order proceedings, to provide evidence of what they would charge:

(1) to provide advice sufficient to meet the proposed requirement for independent legal advice discussed in Chapter 13; and

(2) to draft, advise on and negotiate the written surrogacy agreement required for the new pathway.

N/A

Paragraph 18.8

Consultation Question 113.

1.151 We invite consultees to tell us of the impact of:

(1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and

(2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:

(a) in the new pathway;

(b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or

(c) in both situations.

Paragraph 18.11

Consultation Question 114.

1.152 We invite consultees who consider that they might be able to fulfil the role of the independent professional discussed in Chapter 9 to tell us:

(1) their profession; and

(2) what they would charge to provide such a service.

Paragraph 18.13

Consultation Question 115.

1.153 We invite consultees who are intended parents to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

(1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and

N/A

Paragraph 18.15

Consultation Question 116.

1.155 We ask consultees who are intended parents to tell us:

(1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;

(2) what they spent, in total, on the surrogacy arrangement(s) that led to the birth of their child(ren), including the cost of fertility treatment, payments to the surrogate and payments to any surrogacy agency or organisation;

(3) how they raised the funds for the surrogacy arrangement(s);

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.156 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.157 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Chapter 6: The parental order procedure

8 Consultation Question 1:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

9 Consultation Question 2:

Please provide your views below:

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

10 Consultation Question 3: We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Please provide your views below:

11 Consultation Question 4:

No

Please provide your views below:

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

12 Consultation Question 5: We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the Family Procedure Rules 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise. Do consultees agree?

Please provide your views below:

Chapter 8: Legal Parenthood: Proposals for Reform - A New Pathway

14 Consultation Question 7:

No

Please provide your views below:

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

16 Consultation Question 9: We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

17 Consultation Question 10: We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

18 Consultation Question 11:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

19 Consultation Question 12:

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

21 Consultation Question 14:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

22 Consultation Question 15:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

Yes

Please share your views below:

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

23 Consultation Question 16:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

24 Consultation Question 17: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.Do consultees agree?

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

25 Consultation Question 18: For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

26 Consultation Question 19:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

Please provide your views below:

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

28 Consultation Question 21: We invite consultees' views as to: (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. 30 Consultation Question 23:

Please provide your views below:

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. 32 Consultation Question 25: We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Please provide your views below:

No. There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

33 Consultation Question 26:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

34 Consultation Question 27:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. 35 Consultation Question 28: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.Do consultees agree?

42 Consultation Question 35: We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

43 Consultation Question 36: We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

44 Consultation Question 37: We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

45 Consultation Question 37: We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

46 Consultation Question 38: We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

Please provide your views below:

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

47 Consultation Question 39: We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood. Do consultees agree?

Yes

49 Consultation Question 41: We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

50 Consultation Question 42: We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Chapter 10: Children's Access to Information About Surrogacy Arrangements

51 Consultation Question 43: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18. Do consultees agree?

52 Consultation Question 44: We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

53 Consultation Question 45: We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

Please provide your views below:

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

54 Consultation Question 46: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

56 Consultation Question 48: We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

68 Consultation Question 60: We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order. 69 Consultation Question 61: We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent’s former partner provides gametes but the intended parents’ relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order. While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

72 Consultation Question 64:

No

Please provide your views below:

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

73 Consultation Question 65:

Other

Please provide your views below:

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for a 'new pathway'. At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the ‘new pathway’.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple ‘surrogate’ pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Chapter 15: Payments to the Surrogate: Options for Reform

Please provide your views below:

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women’s reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

87 Consultation Question 79:

Please provide your views below:

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Please provide your views below:

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

115 Consultation Question 107:

Please provide your views below:

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself. There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

Please provide your views below:

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

Please provide your views below:

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

116 Consultation Question 108: We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

Please provide your views below:

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

125 Consultation Question 117: We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Please provide your views below:

Women in Northern Ireland have there human rights restricted already by being denied access to abortion. Imposing this new pathway will lead them to lose more rights and be seen even more as a commodity and not as humans.

126 Consultation Question 118: We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this Consultation Paper.

Please provide your views below:

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

(1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

(2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

(1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and

(2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

(1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;

(2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or

(3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

(1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,

(2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and

(3) met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

1.12 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;

(2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and

(3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

(1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;

(2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and

(3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;

(2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and

(3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

(1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;

(2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and

(3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.15 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

(1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and

(2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.17 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Paragraph 8.77

Consultation Question 17.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

1.19 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

1.21 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

(1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:

(a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and

(b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or

(2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

1.22 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

(1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;

(2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and

(3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.23 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and

(2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.24 We invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and

(2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:

(a) administrative, or

(b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.25 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and

(2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.26 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and

(2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.27 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.28 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

(1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and

(2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.29 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and

(2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the 'intended parents' should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women's reproductive capacities.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.31 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

(2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.140

Consultation Question 30.

1.32 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

1.33 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

N/A

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.34 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.35 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.36 We provisionally propose that:

(1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.37 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

(1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;

(2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;

(3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;

(4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and

(5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

LEAVE ALL CHECK BOXES BLANK (i.e. none of the above)

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.38 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.39 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.40 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.42 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.44 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.45 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

1.46 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

1.47 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

1.48 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

1.49 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.50 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.51 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.52 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.53 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.54 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.55 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;

(2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:

(a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and

(b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and

(3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.56 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

1.57 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

(1) where his or her legal parents have consented;

(2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or

(3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

1.59 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

1.60 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.62 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

(1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or

(2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.63 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.64 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.65 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

(2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

(a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or

(b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and

(3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.66 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.67 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.68 We invite consultees' views on whether:

(1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or

(2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

1.69 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

1.70 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

(1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but

(2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.71 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

1.72 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 12.64

Consultation Question 60.

1.73 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.74 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.75 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

(1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or

(2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.76 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.77 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

(1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or

(2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.79 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.80 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.81 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.82 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.83 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.84 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for a 'new pathway'. At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.85 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.86 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.87 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

(1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and

(2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.88 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

(1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;

(2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and

(3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.90 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.91 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.92 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

(1) based on an allowance;

(2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or

(3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.94 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and

(2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.29

Consultation Question 76.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

(1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or

(2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.99 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

(1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and

(2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

(1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;

(2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or

(3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.101 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

(1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or

(2) left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.103 We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and

(2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.105 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. (check box)

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

(1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or

(2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

(1) no other payments;

(2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;

(3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;

(4) lost earnings;

(5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or

(6) gifts.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

(1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;

(2) to any miscarriage or termination; or

(3) some other period of time (please specify).

Leave all check boxes blank.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

1.110 We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Paragraph 15.74

Consultation Question 85.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

1.112 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.113 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

(1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and

(2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

1.114 We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.115 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

Consultation Question 92.

1.119 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

1.123 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or

(2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.124 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.125 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

1.126 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.127 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.128 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.129 We provisionally propose that:

1.130 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.131 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.132 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.133 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.134 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.135 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and

(2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.137 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself. There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.144 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

(1) when the child was born;

(2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;

(3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and

(4) whether they are a:

(a) opposite-sex couple;

(b) male same-sex couple;

(c) female same-sex couple;

(d) single woman; or

(e) single man.

N/A

Paragraph 18.2

Consultation Question 110.

1.145 We invite consultees who have experience of applying for a parental order in the UK to tell us:

(1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;

(2) whether they had legal advice before the making of the parental order;

(3) whether they were represented by a lawyer in court; and

(4) the cost of any legal advice or representation.

N/A

Paragraph 18.4

Consultation Question 111.

1.146 We invite consultees' views as to the impact (social, emotional, financial or otherwise) of the current law where the intended parents are not the legal parents from birth of the child born of the surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 18.6

Consultation Question 112.

1.147 We invite consultees to tell us what they have paid for, or to provide evidence about the cost of:

(1) medical screening; and

(2) implications counselling

(where possible separating out the cost of such screening, tests or implications counselling from any other costs involved with fertility treatment).

N/A

1.148 We invite legal consultees, who advise on surrogacy and parental order proceedings, to provide evidence of what they would charge:

(1) to provide advice sufficient to meet the proposed requirement for independent legal advice discussed in Chapter 13; and

(2) to draft, advise on and negotiate the written surrogacy agreement required for the new pathway.

N/A

Paragraph 18.8

Consultation Question 113.

1.149 We invite consultees to tell us of the impact of:

(1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and

(2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:

(a) in the new pathway;

(b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or

(c) in both situations.

Paragraph 18.11

Consultation Question 114.

1.150 We invite consultees who consider that they might be able to fulfil the role of the independent professional discussed in Chapter 9 to tell us:

(1) their profession; and

(2) what they would charge to provide such a service.

Paragraph 18.13

Consultation Question 115.

1.151 We invite consultees who are intended parents to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

(1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and

1.152 We invite consultees who are surrogates to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

Paragraph 18.15

Consultation Question 116.

1.153 We ask consultees who are intended parents to tell us:

(1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;

(2) what they spent, in total, on the surrogacy arrangement(s) that led to the birth of their child(ren), including the cost of fertility treatment, payments to the surrogate and payments to any surrogacy agency or organisation;

(3) how they raised the funds for the surrogacy arrangement(s);

(4) what they spent on any fertility treatment prior to entering into a surrogacy arrangement (where that treatment did not lead to the birth of a child); and

(5) how they raised the funds for the fertility treatment.

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.154 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.155 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc. Surrogacy can never be ethical. Children are not property and should never be conceived purely to be given away. Women are not objects, we do not exist purely to enable other people to have children.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Provided there is good documentation of the surrogacy arrangement and all parties can show that they have spoken with a counsellor and a lawyer, then it should be a formality.

12 Consultation Question 5: We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the Family Procedure Rules 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

I think currently there is too much emphasis is placed on the surrogate's rights and not enough on those of the intended parents.

13 Consultation Question 6:

Please provide your views below:

The process should be made easier for the intended parents without eroding (too much) the rights of the surrogate.

You hear stories of surrogates "holding intended parents to ransom" when it comes to handing over the baby. "I'll not contest things if you give me another £10,000". I know of one such case from a friend/colleague in London.
My personal view is that there should be a maximum "fee" e.g. £20,000. This then reduces the risk of such a scenario, and avoids the potential for getting round these areas by not giving "gifts".

If the surrogate wished it, would her name ALSO be able to be recorded somewhere because the surrogate was the "birth mother" and this has to be acknowledged somewhere because it will inevitably be traumatic for her i.e. all 3 people are recorded somewhere.

24 Consultation Question 17: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

If the surrogate wished it, would her name ALSO be able to be recorded somewhere because the surrogate was the "birth mother" and this has to be acknowledged somewhere because it will inevitably be traumatic for her i.e. all 3 people are recorded somewhere.

25 Consultation Question 18: For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

Please provide your views below:

No. as per my responses above, some mechanism ought be put in place where all 3 parties can be recorded.
This is probably at variance with my views on the surrogate's name going on the extended birth certificate when the surrogacy progresses smoothly (so I'm being a bit inconsistent!).

26 Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Please provide your views below:

If both intended parents die before the birth, then there should still be facility for their names to go on the birth certificate.
It should be for the courts to decide who brings up the child e.g. the intended parents' parents (i.e. the grandparents). The surrogate can contest this as per existing legislation and the courts thereafter can decide.
If there are no forthcoming "parents", and the surrogate doesn't want to bring up the child, then the baby can be put up for adoption.

27 Consultation Question 20:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

You would have to PROVE THAT the second intended parent was given sufficient time to oppose the first intended parent's decision.
It should in any case be apparent from the legal paperwork created beforehand what the intentions were.

28 Consultation Question 21: We invite consultees' views as to: (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

Please provide your views below:

Once legal parenthood is granted, the surrogate's name comes off the birth certificate and the other intended parent's name goes on it.

If it is a single man intentionally bringing up a baby on his own, the surrogate's name should still come off the birth certificate and it is up to the child when he/she is 18 years old to trace the surrogate (as per existing HFEA legislation). In fact, in any case it may be that the single man (the intended parent) and the surrogate would already have agreed that there will be contact beforehand.

Personally I am opposed to the surrogate's name going on the EXTENDED birth certificate.
I believe this opens up a whole can or worms for cases where donor eggs or donor sperm was used because it could then be argued that the name of the gamete donor should go on the extended birth certificate of donor-conceived children and I would be opposed to this.

29 Consultation Question 22:

Please provide your views below:

I think all surrogacy cases should be able to provide proof that they have spoken with a lawyer and also with a trained counsellor.

If greater checks are required (criminal record stuff) then it will have to be clear who is responsible for doing it, the pathway to get these checks performed and the costs. "Time is money" and the time taken by clinics/surrogacy agencies to do them and the costs incurred, have to be reflected in costs that are charged to the intended parents.

30 Consultation Question 23:

Please provide your views below:

It's difficult to say if having any genetic link should have some bearing on whether this influences any disputes (I personally think it should not).
I would leave things as they are and if there is a dispute, it should be on a case-by-case basis and assessed in the Family Law Courts.

31 Consultation Question 24:

Please provide your views below:

As above, I don't think having any genetic link should have any bearing on whether this influences any disputes. I would leave things as they are and if there is a dispute, it should be on a case-by-case basis and assessed in the Family Law Courts.

32 Consultation Question 25: We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Please provide your views below:

I'm not sure what "without leave" means, but I do think that the intended parents should have more immediate rights in surrogacy cases.

That's fair enough.

36 Consultation Question 29:

Please provide your views below:

At this stage the surrogate will probably still have the baby. However, there should be no restrictions placed on the intended parents (other than the ones that currently exist).

Chapter 9: The Regulation of Surrogacy Arrangements

37 Consultation Question 30: We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

I still get confused by the terminology and people/patients use “traditional” and “gestational” interchangeably, which provides huge opportunity for confusion.

We would prefer to call it “full” surrogacy and “partial” surrogacy.

“Full” surrogacy is where the “full” genetic material comes from the intended parents, and none of genetic material comes from the surrogate.
“Full” surrogacy would also include cases where the baby is created from say donor eggs and the sperm of male partner of the intended parents. It would also include the proposed acceptance of “double donation” (i.e. donor eggs and donor sperm) because none of genetic material comes from the surrogate.

“Partial” surrogacy is where “part” of the genetic material comes from the surrogate i.e. it’s her eggs.

I believe there is much less scope for confusion if we adopt “full” and “partial” surrogacy as the nomenclature.

38 Consultation Question 31: We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

Please provide your views below:

N/A. I am a clinician in an IVF unit that facilitates surrogacy.

39 Consultation Question 32:

Please provide your views below:

Definitely (but I don’t think it’s possible to enforce this).
There is undoubtedly lots of surrogacy that goes “under the radar”, but it is certainly preferential to have it all “legally” above board.

Please provide your views below:

I don’t think it’s possible to enforce this.
If you had a surrogacy case that went “under the radar”, and then it came to seeking a parental order, I’m not sure that it’s in the baby’s interests to not grant a parental order and have the baby put into care (nobody wins, not least the State which would then have to shoulder the burden of child care).

40 Consultation Question 33:

No

Please provide your views below:

There should be certain standards within which these agencies should have to work and they should be overseen/inspected by an external body e.g. CQC (England) or HIS (Scotland)…or the dreaded HFEA!

41 Consultation Question 34:

representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;, managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;, ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;, training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and, providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Please provide your views below:

This seems sensible to – just as we, in the IVF world, have to do with the HFEA.

Please provide your views below:

The criminal records checking (if that isn't already part of the reqd remit).

Please provide your views below:

I'm not sure you can be prescriptive about the "ideal" person but someone with a Quality management background might be appropriate.

42 Consultation Question 35: We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I'm not involved with surrogacy agencies but to make them "not-for-profit" is a rather nebulous term.
What a Chief Executive of a charity gets paid is up to the Board of that charity. Whilst the charity might not make a "profit", obviously what salaries are paid out affects their bottom line at the end of the financial year (there's a whole stooshie going on just now about the pay of charity chief execs!).

43 Consultation Question 36: We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

Please provide your views below:

Opportunity to meet is the only stipulation.
Beyond that, it's up to the intended parents and the potential surrogate to discuss between themselves about the proximity of the surrogate to the intended parents etc.

With "partial" surrogacy, when it comes to "matching", if the surrogate is of a different ethnic origin to the intended parents should not matter.

44 Consultation Question 37: We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

45 Consultation Question 37: We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

This would be impossible to enforce.
As above, if you had a surrogacy case that went "under the radar", and then it came to seeking a parental order, I'm not sure that it's in the baby's interests to not grant a parental order and have the baby put into care (nobody wins, not least the State which would then have to shoulder the burden of child care).

46 Consultation Question 38: We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

Please provide your views below:

I'm not sure this can be made a "crime" as it would be impossible to enforce.
The facilitator could simply say, "I introduced Couple X to Jane-Doe and what they did thereafter was up to them ...nothing to do with me".
If the facilitator received cash in a brown envelope, it would be impossible to prove that monies changed hands.

47 Consultation Question 39: We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I'm always reluctant to give the HFEA yet more power but I have to concede that they are probably the most appropriate regulatory authority already in existence!

Please provide your views below:

As above, it would follow similar lines to HFEA inspections for IVF units.
My concern is that the quality of the HFEA inspections are so variable. From personal experience, what is considered "acceptable" for one IVF unit with one inspector, is then "unacceptable" for another IVF unit with another inspector!

48 Consultation Question 40: We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms). Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I do think that if there is a dispute, too much weight/power currently lies with the surrogate and this has to be redressed (somehow).

49 Consultation Question 41: We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I think an upper limit of say £5000 should be set for the Surrogacy Agency (I'll leave the actual sum to the Law Commission).
Otherwise, if intended parents can ONLY go through an accredited agency, agencies have a monopoly and can set any fees they like. Even if the agencies are competing with each other, there is a potential for a cartel-like situation to develop, which would only be to the intended parents' disadvantage.

50 Consultation Question 42: We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Chapter 10: Children's Access to Information About Surrogacy Arrangements

51 Consultation Question 43: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

52 Consultation Question 44: We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

Whilst I agree that IT IS BEST THAT a child grows up knowing that they were conceived through surrogacy, to make this explicit on a birth certificate is opening up the whole egg donation/ sperm donation disclosure thing.
If it became law that "surrogacy" went on the birth certificate, then it would inevitably lead to court cases where "egg donation/ sperm donation" would have to go on the birth certificate as well.

53 Consultation Question 45: We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

Please provide your views below:

Maintain the status quo.

54 Consultation Question 46: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

This is effectively the same as for children conceived with donor gametes.

55 Consultation Question 47:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

56 Consultation Question 48: We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

Please provide your views below:

Yes. This is effectively the same as for children conceived with donor gametes.
..but as with donor-conceived children, the (intended) parents have to have told the child in the first place, otherwise the child would not know to consider looking for such information on a national register.

57 Consultation Question 49:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

This is effectively the same as for children conceived with donor gametes.

Please provide your views below:

Only if the surrogate has also agreed to this.

58 Consultation Question 50: We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

Please provide your views below:

The same laws should apply as for those existing for donor-conceived children.

However, in cases of "full" surrogacy, it doesn't matter if Boy X wants to marry Girl Y, even if they had the same birth mother (i.e. the same surrogate).

59 Consultation Question 51:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

..but this is contingent on knowing that they were born through a surrogacy arrangement in the first place.

Please provide your views below:

Only if the law changes and the surrogate is compelled by law for her identity to be made available.

60 Consultation Question 52:

Please provide your views below:

Yes – but this is contingent on the young person knowing that they were conceived through a surrogacy arrangement.

Please provide your views below:

No - not necessary.
It would only be applicable if the law changes and the surrogate is compelled by law for her identity to be made available.

61 Consultation Question 53: For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Please provide your views below:

Yes.

Chapter 11: Eligibility Criteria for a Parental Order

62 Consultation Question 54: We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished. Do consultees agree?

Please provide your views below:

Yes. It appears to often be exceeded anyway!

Chapter 12: Eligibility Criteria for Both a Parental Order and for the New Pathway

64 Consultation Question 56:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Yes... but difficult to define/enforce (HMRC have fights all the time with people not paying taxes in the UK who claim not to be domiciled in the UK!).

Perhaps the test should be that (one of) the intended parents is a UK tax payer.

Please provide your views below:

As above, perhaps the test should be that (one of) the intended parents is a UK tax payer.

65 Consultation Question 57:

Please provide your views below:

Option (2).

66 Consultation Question 58: We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide views below:

67 Consultation Question 59:

Yes

Please provide views below:

Please provide views below:

I'm not sure what this is getting at.
If it's double-donation in a "domestic" surrogacy arrangement is that:
"the surrogate's eggs and another man's sperm (e.g. her husband) and the baby is then handed to the intended parents"?

This is effectively then becoming a baby-farm and selling babies to couples. This is a step too far (and I'm a libertarian).

Yes

Please provide views below:

Yes. This is then minimising the potential for "baby-farming".

However, it would be very hard to prove, other than by genetic testing of the baby and the intended parents.
If it was found that there was no genetic link, it is then a case of "adopting from abroad".
Would the courts turn down the application, and if so where would the baby be placed? I suppose there is no end of infertile couples looking to adopt a baby so if intended parents knew that the child would be taken from them if there is no genetic link, it would be a disincentive to go to an overseas "baby farm" in the first place.

68 Consultation Question 60: We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

69 Consultation Question 61: We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order. Do consultees agree?

Yes

70 Consultation Question 62:

Please provide your views below:

I'm not sure what this Question means.

Please provide your views below:

It is very hard to be prescriptive. Simply going on a woman's age alone is impossible because beyond the age of 34 years old, statistically donor eggs gives a woman a better chance of having a baby than her own eggs.

The woman would have to have no uterus, have a history of recurrent miscarriage or a history of very poor embryo development.

The man would have to be azoospermic or have very poor quality sperm.

Chapter 15: Payments to the Surrogate: Options for Reform

80 Consultation Question 72:

based on an allowance;

Please provide your views below:

I think their should be a "set fee".
This would make everything "above board" and intended parents and the surrogate know in advance what it's going to cost.

81 Consultation Question 73:

Please provide your views below:

A "set fee" obviates the need to itemise things because what is essential for one surrogate isn't necessarily essential for another.
"lost income" for a cleaner is different to "lost income" for a lawyer.

82 Consultation Question 74:

Please provide your views below:

As above, a "set fee" obviates the need to itemise things.
A "set fee" removes any ambiguity and the surrogate can't come back and say, "they promised they would give me £XXX for YYY".

83 Consultation Question 75:

Please provide your views below:

As above, a "set fee" obviates the need to itemise things.
A "set fee" removes any ambiguity and the surrogate can't come back and say, "they promised they would give me £XXX for YYY".

84 Consultation Question 76: We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

Please provide your views below:

As above, a "set fee" removes any ambiguity.
"lost income" for a cleaner is different to "lost income" for a lawyer.

85 Consultation Question 77:

Please provide your views below:

As above, a "set fee" is cleaner.

86 Consultation Question 78:

Please provide your views below:

As above, a "set fee" removes any ambiguity. If the surrogate is being paid, the DoE/Pensions (or whatever Govt. body is involved) would know what he surrogate is receiving and any social security entitlement would be adjusted accordingly. If that's not the case, there is scope for abuse.

87 Consultation Question 79:

Please provide your views below:

No. A “set fee” obviates the need to itemise things.
That said, there should be written into the agreement a fee the surrogate receives if the embryo transfer is unsuccessful (i.e. she doesn’t get the whole amount), and then a fee for each frozen embryo transfer thereafter up to the maximum amount when a baby is born and handed over.

a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or

Please provide your views below:

As above, a “set fee” removes any ambiguity.

88 Consultation Question 80: We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate’s family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate’s death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

Please provide your views below:

I think it should be up to the surrogate to take out life insurance. I presume there are such policies available to surrogates and part of the “fee” should be used for that.
If the surrogate doesn’t take out such a policy and she dies, then that’s her lookout. Putting everything onto the intended parents is too much.

89 Consultation Question 81:

Please provide your views below:

no gifts.

90 Consultation Question 82:

It should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

a fixed fee set by the regulator.

no other payments;

91 Consultation Question 83:

Please provide views below:

Yes, if the surrogate suffers a miscarriage then she gets paid less.
It should be a tiered structure:
1. embryo transfer results in a negative pregnancy test = £XX.
2. embryo transfer results in a positive pregnancy test but ends in an EARLY miscarriage = £(XX + YY).
3. embryo transfer results in a positive pregnancy test but ends in an LATE miscarriage = £(XX + YY + ZZ).
4. Stillbirth/early neonatal death = £(XX + YY + ZZ + AA).
5. Live birth, baby handed over = £(XX + YY + ZZ + AA + BB).
6. Baby kept by the surrogate = Zero paid.

some other period of time (please specify in the box below).

Please provide your views below:

It should be a tiered structure:
1. embryo transfer results in a negative pregnancy test = £XX.
2. embryo transfer results in a positive pregnancy test but ends in an EARLY miscarriage = £(XX + YY).
3. embryo transfer results in a positive pregnancy test but ends in an LATE miscarriage = £(XX + YY + ZZ).
4. Stillbirth/early neonatal death = £(XX + YY + ZZ + AA).
5. Live birth, baby handed over = £(XX + YY + ZZ + AA + BB).
6. Baby kept by the surrogate = Zero paid.

Overall, I think a set fee of £20,000 is reasonable and it is index-linked in some way (the annual increase to be determined by the regulator). This modest sum will more likely deter the “commercial” surrogate i.e. it will only attract potential surrogates that are doing it altruistically.
If surrogate’s want to take less (e.g. if it’s a cousin or some such), then that’s up to the surrogate.

92 Consultation Question 84: We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

93 Consultation Question 85: We invite consultees’ views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

Please provide your views below:

I don't think so.
I am of the view that a “set fee” removes any ambiguity.

94 Consultation Question 86: We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

Question No.	Consultation Question
Q1	Consultation Question 7. In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have: (1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth, (2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and (3) met eligibility requirements, on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q1	Yes
Q2	Consultation Question 11. We provisionally propose that:

	(1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child; (2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and (3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q2	No
Q3	Consultation Question 12. We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that: (1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child; (2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and (3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q3	Yes
Q4	Consultation Question 15. We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.
Your Response to Q4	It depends on the circumstances for the surrogate objecting.
Q5	Consultation Question 27.

	We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway: (1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and (2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q5	Yes
Q6	Consultation Question 28. We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q6	No, the parental responsibility should go to the Intended Parents as soon as the baby is born IF its their embryo and their DNA as it is genetically their child. However if the surrogate uses her own egg then the Intended Parents should have to apply for a parental order unless the surrogate objects
Q7	Consultation Question 29. For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and (2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.
Your Response to Q7	Yes
Q8	Consultation Question 55. We provisionally propose that: (1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available; (2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

	(a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or (b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and (3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q8	Yes
Q9	Consultation Question 30. We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q9	Yes
Q10	Consultation Question 32. We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway. We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.
Your Response to Q10	yes
Q11	Consultation Question 67. We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway: (1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and (2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15. Do consultees agree?

Your Response to Q11	Yes
Q12	Consultation Question 68. We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q12	No
Q13	Consultation Question 88. We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q13	Yes. Yes
Q14	Consultation Question 42. We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q14	Yes
Q15	Consultation Question 62. We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity: (1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or (2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made. We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

Your Response to Q15	Yes
Q16	Consultation Question 70. We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.
Your Response to Q16	No they shouldn't have had to give birth previously. Some surrogates don't want children of their own.
Q17	Consultation Question 33. We provisionally propose that: (1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations; (2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and (3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q17	yes
Q18	Consultation Question 35. We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q18	Yes
Q19	Consultation Question 37. We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.
Your Response to Q19	Yes. I don't think people should be matched though I think they should have access to profiles and be able to match themselves.
Q20	Consultation Question 59.

	We provisionally propose that the new pathway – (1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but (2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements. We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q20	Yes
Q21	Consultation Question 46. We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q21	Yes
Q22	Consultation Question 47. We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that: (1) the register should be maintained by the Authority; (2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include: (a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and

	(b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and (3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q22	Yes
Q23	Consultation Question 48. We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.
Your Response to Q23	Yes
Q24	Consultation Question 49. We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances: (1) where his or her legal parents have consented; (2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or (3) in any other circumstances.
Your Response to Q24	Yes
Q25	Consultation Question 51. We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so. Do consultees agree?

	We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.
Your Response to Q25	Yes
Q26	Consultation Question 52. We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so: (1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or (2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.
Your Response to Q26	Yes
Q27	Consultation Question 53. For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.
Your Response to Q27	Yes they should.
Q28	Consultation Question 72. We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be: (1) based on an allowance; (2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or (3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.
Your Response to Q28	2
Q29	Consultation Question 73. We invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and

	(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".
Your Response to Q29	All essential costs are any costs that the surrogate wouldn't have incurred if she had not chosen to be a surrogate. Including Maternity clothes, toiletries relating to pregnancy (breast pads and disposable underwear etc), loss of earnings, parking charges from hospital/clinics etc.
Q30	Consultation Question 74. We invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.
Your Response to Q30	Yes, There should be additional costs to help the surrogates family if required, for example a Recouperation Break after the birth to help the surrogate re bond with her family/children.
Q31	Consultation Question 75. We invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and (2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.
Your Response to Q31	Yes. Its unfair for the surrogate to have to be out of pocket for helping people become a family, all costs relating from getting to know each other until after the birth should be covered.
Q32	Consultation Question 76. We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).
Your Response to Q32	Yes they should.
Q33	Consultation Question 77. We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings: (1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or (2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

Your Response to Q33	Yes they should
Q34	Consultation Question 78. We invite consultees to share their experiences: (1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and (2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.
Your Response to Q34	As long as they don't profit from the Surrogacy I think they should be entitled to their benefits.
Q35	Consultation Question 79. We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following: (1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth; (2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or (3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy. We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation. We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be: (1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or (2) left to the parties to negotiate.
Your Response to Q35	No I don't think the surrogate should be compensated but she shouldn't be left out of pocket either.
Q36	Consultation Question 80. We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

Your Response to Q36	Life insurance should be paid for by the IPs in case of this.
Q37	Consultation Question 81. We invite consultees' views as to whether: (1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and (2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.
Your Response to Q37	Yes, IPs should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate if they want to and vice versa. Costs shouldn't be limited as it is up to the IPs
Q38	Consultation Question 82. We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be: (1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or (2) a fixed fee set by the regulator. We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee: (1) no other payments; (2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy; (3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy; (4) lost earnings; (5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or (6) gifts.
Your Response to Q38	No fixed fee should be made, it should just be expenses so the surrogate isn't left worse off and out of pocket
Q39	Consultation Question 84. We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

	Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q39	Yes
Q40	Consultation Question 85. We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.
Your Response to Q40	Costs of getting to know each other and the costs of trying to conceive
Q41	Consultation Question 92. We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q41	yes
Q42	Consultation Question 94. We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that: (1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or (2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

Your Response to Q42	yes
Q43	Consultation Question 95. We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q43	Yes
Q44	Consultation Question 97. We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q44	Yes
Q45	Consultation Question 99. We provisionally propose that: the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q45	Yes
Q46	Consultation Question 107. We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

	We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales. We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.
Your Response to Q46	I think more midwives and health staff should have more in depth training around surrogacy to help them understand and to ease the surrogate and the IPs

Chapter 8: Legal Parenthood: Proposals for Reform - A New Pathway

14 Consultation Question 7:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

BPAS agrees with the proposed new pathway, which in our view - subject to a few alterations - constitutes a workable system that would sufficiently safeguard surrogates. In particular, we are supportive of the fact that surrogacy agreements would be unenforceable and the surrogate would retain a right to object - both of which would ensure her autonomy is preserved.

16 Consultation Question 9: We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

BPAS does not agree with the prohibition of anonymously donated gametes.

In practice this would preclude surrogates and intended parents from engaging with surrogacy organisations - and benefiting from their advice and guidance - in cases where anonymously donated sperm has been imported from abroad. It would also preclude surrogates and intended parents from engaging with surrogacy organisations in cases where sperm (from a donor within the UK) has been donated via an informal arrangement, e.g. where a sperm donor has been found online.

In both scenarios, it would be disproportionate to prevent the surrogate and intended parents from engaging with surrogacy organisations, restricting their access to advice. Such a preclusion would be in the best interests of neither the surrogate nor the intended parents.

17 Consultation Question 10: We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

We do not believe that surrogates and intended parents in this situation should be precluded from entering the new pathway.

This would be out of step with the current law on the acquisition of parenthood in non-surrogacy situations, especially IVF. In cases where IVF is undertaken abroad using anonymously donated gametes, for example, the gestational mother and her partner obtain legal parenthood in the UK from birth. This is unaffected by their use of anonymously donated gametes. There is no reason, therefore, that intended parents should not be afforded the same status (i.e. legal parenthood from birth) in surrogacy cases where anonymously donated gametes have been used, providing that all other requirements for entering the new pathway have been met.

Surrogacy is a valid reproductive pathway and there is no justification for exceptionalising it in law by requiring intended parents to apply for a parental order because anonymously donated gametes have been used. Surrogates and intended parents who have used anonymously donated gametes should be permitted access to the new pathway.

18 Consultation Question 11:

No

Please provide your views below:

Regarding the objection period:
The objection period begins too late. The surrogate's right to object should come into force as soon as the agreement is made and should continue throughout the pregnancy, throughout labour, and for a fixed period after the birth. If the surrogate wishes to exit the agreement (and thus exit the new pathway) at any stage during the pregnancy, she should have the right to do so immediately, without having to wait until after the birth.

In cases where a surrogate changes her mind during pregnancy, it is unreasonable to compel her to remain in the agreement - and thus on the new pathway - for the remainder of her pregnancy and labour. This is a point of principle, but there are practical implications too. Under the current proposal, in this scenario the surrogate would need to wait until after the birth and then object, in writing, immediately in order to exit the new pathway as swiftly as possible. This would be highly impractical and could cause significant confusion post-birth, since the responsibility for decisions regarding the newborn's care may immediately be contested, placing midwives and obstetricians in an untenable position.

Regarding the requirement to make the objection in writing:
In cases where the surrogate changes her mind during labour, it is impractical to require her to make her objection in writing, and the subsequent confusion may cause significant difficulties regarding parental responsibility and decision-making regarding the child's care. Therefore, we propose that in these circumstances the surrogate should not be required to make her objection in writing. Instead she should be able to raise her objection verbally and follow up in writing within a defined period.

19 Consultation Question 12:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

The right to object is central to BPAS' support of the new pathway. In order for the surrogate's rights to be fully protected she must retain the right to exit the new pathway at any stage, and thus to become a legal parent from birth of the child she has gestated.

For the right to object to be meaningful, the surrogate upon exercising it must have the same rights as any other gestational mother, including legal parenthood from birth.

20 Consultation Question 13:

No

Please provide your views below:

Positive consent should be required in all instances, in order to safeguard the surrogate. There is a clear conflict of interest in asking intended parents to make the declaration since they themselves stand to benefit from the declaration being made. Moreover, in many cases it will be impossible for the intended parents to reliably assess the surrogate's capacity during the entire objection period (for example if they live in different cities).

21 Consultation Question 14:

No

Please provide your views below:

This would unnecessarily exceptionalise surrogacy in law. In all other scenarios, the gestational mother and her spouse acquire legal parenthood by default at birth. In cases where a surrogate has exercised her right to object, and thus opted to exit the new pathway, her legal status - and that of her spouse - should be no different from that of any other postnatal woman and her spouse.

When a surrogate raises her right to object, she opts to exit the surrogacy agreement, and the new pathway, altogether. In order for this objection to be meaningful, the surrogate and her partner should not have their right to legal parenthood withheld due to the fact that the surrogacy agreement (which has now been broken) once existed. In raising her right to object, the surrogate is bidding to retain legal parenthood, in which case there should be an option for her husband/partner to be a legal parent.

24 Consultation Question 17: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.Do consultees agree?

25 Consultation Question 18: For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

Please provide your views below:

Upon the death of the surrogate, the surrogacy agreement should become void. In this case, the intended parents should be required to apply for a parental order, rather than automatically acquiring legal parenthood.

26 Consultation Question 19:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

BPAS supports this on the condition that the surrogate retains her right to object.

Please provide your views below:

1) Yes. In these circumstances it should be permissible for an application to be made for a parental order or an appointment as guardian. In both cases the surrogate's consent should be sought.

2) No. In the vast majority of cases this would reflect the wishes of neither the living surrogate nor the deceased intended parents.

33 Consultation Question 26:

No

Please provide your views below:

BPAS does not object in theory to the automatic transfer of parental responsibility from the surrogate to the intended parents, since there are obvious practical benefits. However, it is essential that the surrogate has the right to object.

In all instances where the surrogate does not "by default" have the same rights as any other postnatal woman, she must retain the right to object. This includes both the automatic transfer of legal parenthood under the new pathway, and the automatic transfer of parental responsibility under the old pathway.

34 Consultation Question 27:

Other

Please provide your views below:

(1) Yes, subject to the surrogate's right to object.
(2) No. As per our answer to 26, BPAS believes that in all cases where the surrogate does not 'by default' have the same rights as any other postnatal woman she should retain a right to object. Moreover, in order for this right to object to be meaningful it must include the option for the surrogate to have parental responsibility.

Under the proposal set out here, it is conceivable that a surrogate could exercise her right to object but the child would remain under somebody else's care until the court hearing - which could be many months. This would in our view render the right to object meaningless.

35 Consultation Question 28: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

The surrogate should retain parental responsibility (shared with the intended parents) until the expiry of the objection period.

40 Consultation Question 33:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

BPAS supports the provisional proposals to create a regulated framework for surrogacy organisations in the same way that other assisted conception techniques are regulated. We believe that this type of regulation is preferable to including regulation in a legislative vehicle – enabling changes to be made alongside medical best practice and changing methods and approaches to creating families.

Yes

Please provide your views below:

We agree that surrogacy organisations should not be required to take a particular form – this is echoed in all other aspects of healthcare, and we would be reluctant to exceptionalise surrogacy by demanding, for instance, that surrogacy organisations would have to be charities.

Yes

Please provide your views below:

We agree with the appointment of a single person as the simplest way to enforce regulation. This is how other comparable medical care works - such as with clinic managers being the single responsible person for the CQC.

44 Consultation Question 37: We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

BPAS agree with the provisional proposal. We believe that intended parents and surrogates should be able to rely on a robust legal framework to protect their best interests – and allowing unregulated bodies to do so risks undermining the legal and regulatory protections provided to those involved in surrogacy arrangements. We also believe that an ability to operate outside the regulatory framework would risk undermining the intentions of revised legislation – particularly those involving payments and international surrogacy arrangements.

45 Consultation Question 37: We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

46 Consultation Question 38: We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

47 Consultation Question 39: We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood. Please provide your views below:

48 Consultation Question 40: We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms). Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

BPAS strongly agrees that surrogacy arrangements should remain unenforceable – and would wholly oppose any attempt to include in law any indication that a woman acting as a surrogate could have her behaviour, choices, and actions during pregnancy and labour constrained by a contractual agreement with a third party.

Furthermore, we believe that any provision of this nature would be in contravention of Articles 4 (Prohibition of slavery and forced labour), 8 (Right to respect for private and family life), and 14 (Prohibition of discrimination) of the European Convention on Human Rights, on the grounds that enforceability would deny a woman, for a period dating at least 9 months, an ability to make decisions about her own private life, and remove her ability to opt out of the contract (eg by terminating the pregnancy or by making a decision about parenthood) without being subject to civil proceedings.

Chapter 10: Children's Access to Information About Surrogacy Arrangements

51 Consultation Question 43: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18. Do consultees agree?

52 Consultation Question 44: We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

BPAS do not agree with the provisional proposal, which exceptionalises surrogacy and undermines the rights of parents to decide whether or when to tell their children about their biological and gestational origins.

We also believe that this introduces a fundamentally new construct into law which has a significant potential to be damaging to all women - that gestational origin is something that is both essential to the identity of a person (as the inclusion on a birth certificate would indicate), and that its influence is such that it is more important to the identity of a person than their genetic origins. In the case of gestational surrogacy, this provision indicates that the law believes that a woman who has carried a pregnancy for 9 months but who has no genetic relationship to the resulting child has such an impact on that child's life that the fact the child was not carried by their genetic parent should be notified on their publicly-available birth certificate. Although this interpretation of gestational determinism may be understandably relevant to surrogacy - the Commission should not overlook the serious impact this will have on other areas of law and policy, including those that determine women's actions during pregnancy and the impact on her child. Recognising gestation as a distinct, notifiable, aspect of personhood carries with it the dangerous implication that women could have obligations to behave in certain ways whilst pregnant. This is something we wholly oppose.

There is currently no provision on birth certificates for notation of donor conception, and we believe that this is the appropriate comparison. There can be no justification for treating a child born of a surrogacy arrangement any differently to a child whose genetic background is not related to either one or both of their legal parents.

We believe that the apparent differentiation between 'full form' and other forms of birth certificate is also outdated, given that for the purposes of proving identity for births after 1st January 1983, the full birth certificate is necessary. This means that if you are asked to prove your identity, for instance by an employer checking your right to work, or by the NHS checking eligibility to receive free care, your use of your birth certificate will require the disclosure of surrogacy information.

Further, under the Births and Deaths Registration Act 1953, 'any person shall be entitled to search the said indexes at any time when the General Register Office is open for that purpose, and to have a certified copy of any entry in the said certified copies'. What that means, in short, is that any person who knows the rough date of birth and name of one of the intended parents would be able to obtain a birth certificate disclosing that their child was born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement.

In our view there is simply no justification for information about surrogacy being included on the birth certificate.

59 Consultation Question 51:

No

Please provide your views below:

In line with our response to q44, we believe enshrining gestation as a separate concept in law has the potential to have negative impacts on all women. We would therefore suggest removing 'born to, and' from this statement. Genetic relations involving regulated activities are already able to trace information, and there is no requirement in this circumstance to go beyond what is already in law.

Please provide your views below:

We do not believe that gestational links that do not include genetics should be available for searching on the register.

60 Consultation Question 52:

Please provide your views below:

Please provide your views below:

BPAS does not believe that children who are genetically unrelated to surrogate-born children should be able to use the register to identify each other. The decision to act as a gestational surrogate belongs to the woman involved, and not to other people in her life who have no genetic link to her surrogate pregnancy. We also find it curious that 52(2) is a separate question from the second part of 51, when the ultimate relationship of the children involved is the same. There is no reason that the 'surrogate's own child' should be entitled to information which a surrogate-born child is not. And our opinion is that no information should be available about other children to whom there is no genetic link.

61 Consultation Question 53: For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Yes

Please provide your views below:

BPAS believes that the current interpretation of the legal requirement for consent, with the exceptions provided is an appropriate. We believe it is important to ensure that these exceptions continue to be narrowly drawn and cannot be used as a way particularly to avoid the provision of consent in international surrogacy arrangements.

No

Please provide your views below:

BPAS does not believe that these additional provisions for dispensing with the consent of the surrogate adequately protect the legal position of a surrogate mother – particularly one who may have exercised her right to object. In order to retain a surrogate's rights, there has to be a meaningful right to object - and increasing the ease with which a surrogate's consent can be dispensed with, in our view, unduly shifts the balance of power away from the surrogate.
a) There is a fundamental difference between living arrangements and legal parenthood, and consent to one does not necessarily entail consent to the other. The concession of living arrangements should not – in and of itself – constitute a grounds for dispensing of consent to a parental order.
b) Similarly, the determination of a court as to living arrangements should not entail an easier path to the removal of the surrogate's legal parental rights. The issues considered and decided upon are different, and the impact of the latter has a much greater impact on the surrogate's legal status. She should be entitled to have her case specifically on parental rights heard in a dedicated court hearing.

67 Consultation Question 59:

No

Please provide views below:

BPAS do not agree that double donation should only be permitted in the event of infertility. The provision for any form of double donation indicates that intended parents' genetic relationship to a surrogate child is not necessary. There is, therefore, no reasonable cause to restrict this provision to those who have absolutely no other choice – and it is unclear what mischief this provision is directed at preventing.

We recognise that families can be created in many different ways, and that genetic and/or gestational links are not a necessary prerequisite to becoming a parent or building a family.

Once again, this provision would exceptionalise surrogacy. Double donation for IVF is a recognised practice available to women who are able to carry the pregnancy themselves, without legal medical restrictions on which women are eligible for this treatment option. Women who are unable to carry the pregnancy themselves would therefore be placed at a disadvantage – with the potential outcome that the intended parent or parents may be unable to have a child.

We also believe that the framing of this proposal places a significant burden of proof on individuals with regards to infertility. For instance - if a woman is unable to conceive owing to PCOS, but her doctor includes in the diagnosis that her symptoms may be lessened if she lost weight, would that count as infertility? We believe that looking at the conditions attached to NHS funding for IVF, it is clear that a requirement for infertility will mean that many parents who are functionally unable to provide gametes that result in a healthy pregnancy will be precluded from using double donation.

Yes

Please provide your views below:

BPAS agree that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. However, we believe that if the age of intended parents is taken into account in applications to grant a parental order, this information (and guidance) should be available from regulated surrogacy organisations so that intended parents can make informed decisions.

We do question, however, whether there is, in practice, any age at which the court would decline to grant a parental order – given that the alternative would leave the child without legal parents who have parental responsibility. As with the current provision on expenses, this provision is liable for misuse because it indicates a boundary where, in practice, none will exist.

BPAS would question what 'medical testing' is concerned with in this question. The medical testing/screening in the Code of Practice is based both on guidelines and on s13(9) of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990.

We do not believe it is appropriate to include in legislation the requirement for medical testing or for a legal requirement (as per the HFEA 1990) to opt for embryos without an abnormality over those with an abnormality.

Regulation is a more appropriate place to situate requirements medical testing as this will be based on current best medical practice.

75 Consultation Question 67:

No

Please provide your views below:

BPAS strongly disagrees with this proposal. As abortion providers, we are deeply concerned by any proposal that predicates access to reproductive health and rights on the take-up of counselling. This type of proposal has a long and negative history with denying women's ability to make their own reproductive decisions – particularly those that may not fit with society's expectations of women's choices.

Nowhere in law is there currently a requirement for individuals to attend counselling prior to entering into medical treatment or a legal contract. The most obvious comparison is, once again, IVF. The HFEA 1990 says that counselling for assisted conception 'must be offered' (Schedule 3ZA, Part 2) but does not place an obligation on the patient to take it up. S13 of the HFEA 1990 requires that patients have "been given a suitable opportunity to receive proper counselling". Similarly, the HFEA Code of Practice provides for 'counselling to be offered' (Interpretation of mandatory requirements 3A). None of these require a woman 'to attend counselling' prior to exercising her reproductive rights.

Similarly, for abortion care, although the provision of counselling pre- and post-abortion is required under the Required Standard Operating Procedures from the Department of Health, no woman is required to take it up. It is also not mentioned anywhere in legislation.

We therefore suggest that provision of counselling is included in regulation and not legislation, and that take-up of counselling is not required.

BPAS do not believe that there should be a requirement to have previously given birth. This decision is rightly one for the surrogate and not one that it is reasonable to impose at either a legislative or regulatory level. Information should be provided to all potential surrogates to ensure that they fully understand the risks of pregnancy and birth, regardless of whether they have previously given birth.

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

(1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

(2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

(1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and

(2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

(1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;

(2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or

(3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

(1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,

(2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and

(3) met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

1.12 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;

(2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and

(3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

(1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;

(2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and

(3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;

(2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and

(3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

(1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;

(2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and

(3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.17 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

(1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and

(2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.19 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Paragraph 8.77

Consultation Question 17.

1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

1.21 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

1.22 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

1.23 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

(1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:

(a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and

(b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or

(2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

1.24 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

(1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;

(2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and

(3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.25 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and

(2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.26 We invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and

(2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:

(a) administrative, or

(b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.27 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and

(2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.28 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and

(2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.29 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

(1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and

(2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.31 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and

(2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify a measure that contravenes recommendations of

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.32 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the 'intended parents' should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women's reproductive capacities.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.33 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

(2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.140

Consultation Question 30.

1.34 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

1.35 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

N/A

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.36 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.37 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.38 We provisionally propose that:

(1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.39 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

(1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;

(2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;

(3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;

(4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and

(5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

LEAVE ALL CHECK BOXES BLANK (i.e. none of the above)

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.40 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.42 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.44 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.45 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.46 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.47 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

1.48 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

1.49 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

1.50 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

1.51 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.52 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.53 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.54 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.55 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.56 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.57 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;

(2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:

(a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and

(b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and

(3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

1.59 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.60 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

(1) where his or her legal parents have consented;

(2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or

(3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

1.62 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.63 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.64 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

(1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or

(2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.65 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.66 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.67 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

(2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

(a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or

(b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and

(3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.68 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.69 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.70 We invite consultees' views on whether:

(1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or

(2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

1.71 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

1.72 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

(1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but

(2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.73 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

1.74 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 12.64

Consultation Question 60.

1.75 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.76 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.77 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

(1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or

(2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.79 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.80 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

(1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or

(2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.81 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.82 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.83 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood.

I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.84 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.85 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.86 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.87 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.88 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

(1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and

(2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.90 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.91 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

(1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;

(2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and

(3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.92 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.94 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

(1) based on an allowance;

(2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or

(3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and

(2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.29

Consultation Question 76.

1.99 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

(1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or

(2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.101 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

(1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and

(2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

(1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;

(2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or

(3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.103 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

(1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or

(2) left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.105 We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and

(2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. (check box)

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

(1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or

(2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

(1) no other payments;

(2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;

(3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;

(4) lost earnings;

(5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or

(6) gifts.

Leave all check boxes blank.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.110 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

(1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;

(2) to any miscarriage or termination; or

(3) some other period of time (please specify).

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

1.112 We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Paragraph 15.74

Consultation Question 85.

1.113 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

1.114 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.115 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

(1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and

(2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

1.116 We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.117 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

Paragraph 16.12

Consultation Question 91.

1.120 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of their experience of applying to register a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement as a British citizen and obtaining a passport for the child. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have about causes of delays in the process.

Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.53

Consultation Question 93.

1.122 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. Paragraph 16.68

Consultation Question 94.

1.123 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport before the child is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

1.124 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.125 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or

(2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.126 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.127 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

1.128 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.129 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.130 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.131 We provisionally propose that:

1.132 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.133 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.134 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.135 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.137 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and

(2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself.

There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.144 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.145 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.146 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

(1) when the child was born;

(2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;

(3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and

(1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and

(2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:

(a) in the new pathway;

(b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or

(c) in both situations.

(3) how they raised the funds for the surrogacy arrangement(s);

(4) what they spent on any fertility treatment prior to entering into a surrogacy arrangement (where that treatment did not lead to the birth of a child); and

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.156 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.157 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Chapter 8: Legal Parenthood: Proposals for Reform - A New Pathway

14 Consultation Question 7:

No

Please provide your views below:

No. The Intended parents should not be documented as the legal parents at birth. This would reduce the birth mother to a vessel, a container, such knowledge of which would be detrimental to the mental health of the child, and against the healthy formation of their identity. This proposal weakens the surrogate's right to change her mind.

16 Consultation Question 9: We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

The prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements, otherwise this limits the right of the child to discover their genetic identity and may risk attraction to closely related persons.

17 Consultation Question 10: We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

The surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal status by the Intended Parents immediately after the birth and before the baby is handed over. This consultation takes no account of the natural link between birth mother and baby and assumes an immediate hand-over, whether the birth mother objects or not. The birth mother should have the right to change her mind.

The surrogacy business should be banned not made easier. There is no evidence in the proposed changes that the surrogacy business, which benefits Agencies, lawyers and those commissioning a surrogate (who is expected to carry a child as an altruistic act) should be made easier for those who profit. The evidence points to banning or severely restricting surrogacy practices as has been done in European countries such as Switzerland, France, Germany and Sweden and further afield in India and Thailand.

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

(1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

(2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

(1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and

(2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

(1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;

(2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or

(3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

(1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,

(2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and

(3) met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

1.12 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;

(2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and

(3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

(1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;

(2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and

(3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;

(2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and

(3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

(1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;

(2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and

(3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.17 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

(1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and

(2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.19 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Paragraph 8.77

Consultation Question 17.

1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

1.21 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

1.22 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

1.23 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

(1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:

(a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and

(b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or

(2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

1.24 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

(1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;

(2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and

(3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.25 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and

(2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.26 We invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and

(2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:

(a) administrative, or

(b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.27 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and

(2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.28 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and

(2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.29 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

(1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and

(2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.31 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and

(2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.32 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the 'intended parents' should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women's reproductive capacities.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.33 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

(2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.140

Consultation Question 30.

1.34 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

1.35 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

N/A

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.36 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.37 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.38 We provisionally propose that:

(1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.39 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

(1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;

(2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;

(3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;

(4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and

(5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

LEAVE ALL CHECK BOXES BLANK (i.e. none of the above)

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.40 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.42 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.44 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.45 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.46 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.47 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

1.48 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

1.49 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

1.50 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

1.51 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.52 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.53 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.54 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.55 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.56 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.57 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;

(2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:

(a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and

(b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and

(3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

1.59 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.60 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

(1) where his or her legal parents have consented;

(2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or

(3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

1.62 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.63 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.64 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

(1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or

(2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.65 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.66 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.67 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

(2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

(a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or

(b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and

(3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.68 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.69 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.70 We invite consultees' views on whether:

(1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or

(2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

1.71 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

1.72 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

(1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but

(2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.73 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

1.74 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 12.64

Consultation Question 60.

1.75 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.76 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.77 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

(1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or

(2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.79 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.80 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

(1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or

(2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.81 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.82 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.83 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood.

I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.84 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.85 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.86 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for a 'new pathway'. At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.87 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.88 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

(1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and

(2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.90 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.91 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

(1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;

(2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and

(3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.92 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.94 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

(1) based on an allowance;

(2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or

(3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and

(2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.29

Consultation Question 76.

1.99 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

(1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or

(2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.101 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

(1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and

(2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

(1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;

(2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or

(3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.103 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

(1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or

(2) left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.105 We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and

(2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. (check box)

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

(1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or

(2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

(1) no other payments;

(2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;

(3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;

(4) lost earnings;

(5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or

(6) gifts.

Leave all check boxes blank.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.110 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

(1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;

(2) to any miscarriage or termination; or

(3) some other period of time (please specify).

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

1.112 We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Paragraph 15.74

Consultation Question 85.

1.113 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

1.114 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.115 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

(1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and

(2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

1.116 We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.117 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Consultation Question 93.

1.122 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. 1.123 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth.

1.124 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.125 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or

(2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.126 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

1.128 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.129 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.130 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.131 We provisionally propose that:

1.132 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.133 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.134 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.135 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.137 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and

(2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself.

There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.144 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.145 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.146 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

(1) when the child was born;

(2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;

(3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and

(4) whether they are a:

(a) opposite-sex couple;

(b) male same-sex couple;

(c) female same-sex couple;

(d) single woman; or

(e) single man.

N/A

Paragraph 18.2

Consultation Question 110.

1.147 We invite consultees who have experience of applying for a parental order in the UK to tell us:

(1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;

(2) whether they had legal advice before the making of the parental order;

(3) whether they were represented by a lawyer in court; and

(4) the cost of any legal advice or representation.

N/A

Paragraph 18.4

Consultation Question 111.

1.148 We invite consultees' views as to the impact (social, emotional, financial or otherwise) of the current law where the intended parents are not the legal parents from birth of the child born of the surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 18.6

Consultation Question 112.

1.149 We invite consultees to tell us what they have paid for, or to provide evidence about the cost of:

(1) medical screening; and

(2) implications counselling

(where possible separating out the cost of such screening, tests or implications counselling from any other costs involved with fertility treatment).

N/A

1.150 We invite legal consultees, who advise on surrogacy and parental order proceedings, to provide evidence of what they would charge:

(1) to provide advice sufficient to meet the proposed requirement for independent legal advice discussed in Chapter 13; and

(2) to draft, advise on and negotiate the written surrogacy agreement required for the new pathway.

N/A

Paragraph 18.8

Consultation Question 113.

1.151 We invite consultees to tell us of the impact of:

(1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and

(2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:

(a) in the new pathway;

(b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or

(c) in both situations.

Paragraph 18.11

Consultation Question 114.

1.152 We invite consultees who consider that they might be able to fulfil the role of the independent professional discussed in Chapter 9 to tell us:

(1) their profession; and

(2) what they would charge to provide such a service.

N/A

Paragraph 18.13

Consultation Question 115.

1.153 We invite consultees who are intended parents to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

(1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and

(2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

1.154 We invite consultees who are surrogates to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

(1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and

(2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

Paragraph 18.15

Consultation Question 116.

1.155 We ask consultees who are intended parents to tell us:

(1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;

(2) what they spent, in total, on the surrogacy arrangement(s) that led to the birth of their child(ren), including the cost of fertility treatment, payments to the surrogate and payments to any surrogacy agency or organisation;

(3) how they raised the funds for the surrogacy arrangement(s);

(4) what they spent on any fertility treatment prior to entering into a surrogacy arrangement (where that treatment did not lead to the birth of a child); and

(5) how they raised the funds for the fertility treatment.

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.156 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.157 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

(1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

(2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

(1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and

(2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

(1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;

(2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or

(3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

(1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,

(2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and

(3) met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

1.12 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;

(2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and

(3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

(1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;

(2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and

(3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;

(2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and

(3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

(1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;

(2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and

(3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.17 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

(1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and

(2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.19 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Paragraph 8.77

Consultation Question 17.

1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

1.21 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

1.22 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

1.23 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

(1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:

(a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and

(b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or

(2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

1.24 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

(1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;

(2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and

(3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.25 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and

(2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.26 We invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and

(2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:

(a) administrative, or

(b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.27 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and

(2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.28 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and

(2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.29 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

(1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and

(2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.31 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and

(2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.32 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the 'intended parents' should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women's reproductive capacities.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.33 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

(2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Consultation Question 30.

1.34 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

1.35 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.36 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.37 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.38 We provisionally propose that:

(1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.39 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

(1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;

(2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;

(3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;

(4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and

(5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

LEAVE ALL CHECK BOXES BLANK (i.e. none of the above)

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.40 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.42 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.44 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.45 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.46 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.47 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

1.48 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

1.49 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

1.50 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

1.51 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.52 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.53 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.54 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.55 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.56 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.57 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;

(2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:

(a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and

(b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and

(3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

1.59 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.60 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

(1) where his or her legal parents have consented;

(2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or

(3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

1.62 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.63 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.64 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

(1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or

(2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.65 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.66 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.67 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

(2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

(a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or

(b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and

(3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.68 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.69 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.70 We invite consultees' views on whether:

(1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or

(2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

1.71 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

1.72 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

(1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but

(2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.73 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

1.74 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 12.64

Consultation Question 60.

1.75 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.76 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I absolutely dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.77 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

(1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or

(2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I absolutely dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.79 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.80 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

(1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or

(2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.81 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.82 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.83 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood.

I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.84 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.85 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.86 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for a 'new pathway'. At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.87 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.88 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

(1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and

(2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.90 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.91 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

(1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;

(2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and

(3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.92 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.94 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

(1) based on an allowance;

(2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or

(3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and

(2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.29

Consultation Question 76.

1.99 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

(1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or

(2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.101 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

(1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and

(2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

(1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;

(2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or

(3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.103 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

(1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or

(2) left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.105 We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor and low paid women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and

(2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. (check box)

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

(1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or

(2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

(1) no other payments;

(2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;

(3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;

(4) lost earnings;

(5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or

(6) gifts.

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to make any type of fee or payment to the birth mother for her 'services'.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.110 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

(1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;

(2) to any miscarriage or termination; or

(3) some other period of time (please specify).

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

1.112 We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Paragraph 15.74

Consultation Question 85.

1.113 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

1.114 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.115 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

(1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and

(2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

1.116 We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.117 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

Consultation Question 91.

1.120 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of their experience of applying to register a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement as a British citizen and obtaining a passport for the child. Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

1.122 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. Paragraph 16.68

Consultation Question 94.

1.123 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport before the child is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

1.124 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.125 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or

(2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.126 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.127 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.129 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.130 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.131 We provisionally propose that:

1.132 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.133 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.134 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.135 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.137 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and

(2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself.

There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.144 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.145 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.156 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.157 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

No

Please provide your views below:

I disagree. If the gametes have been obtained through proper channel - anonymously donated through a clinic where screening has taken place and records are kept, then this should not be a barrier to surrogacy.

17 Consultation Question 10: We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I disagree. If the sperm has been obtained through proper channel - anonymously donated through a clinic where screening has taken place and records are kept, then this should not be a barrier to surrogacy.

18 Consultation Question 11:

No

My experience has been that surrogates do not want legal responsibility for a child who is not theirs. The time for this objection is prior to the agreement being in place and embarking on the surrogacy journey.

The surrogate should not be able to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, other than in absolute extreme cases where she has tangible evidence that the safety of the child is at risk.

i think charging for these elements begins to create a market place where suppliers are selling a solution. This would lead to competition and dubious practices as varies organizations compete to earn the most money through fees. If there is to be fees charged, they should be standardized by the HEFA to prevent this from happening.

As someone who works in advertising, the moment you open up to allow advertising for surrogacy, you start on the path towards commercializing surrogacy, which would ultimately be detrimental to all involved.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

Please provide your views below:

Having lived [redacted] I worry about the commercial aspect of surrogacy. It should not become a "pay to play" arena where surrogates are competing to make the most profit. Plus once the exchange of payments happens this risks becoming a "suppler" and "client" relationship rather than one based on trust and friendship. Surrogates should be able to maintain autonomy of their own bodies and not have to answer to someone who has paid them for a service and has their own expectations of what she should do.

I don't think any payment should be allowed. However if the final decision is to allow pay for play in surrogate then a fixed fee is critical to prevent it becoming a supply./demand marketplace.

Short Form Questionnaire: Law Commissions' Surrogacy Consultation

This form is an extract of the longer form for comments and responses to the Law Commission's and the Scottish Law Commission's consultation about reforming surrogacy law. If you would like to respond to the full version of our consultation questionnaire, please use the online form: https://consult.justice.gov.uk/law-commission/surrogacy. Please see our websites for further details, and for links to download the full consultation paper: https://www.lawcom.gov.uk/project/surrogacy/ and https://www.scotlawcom.gov.uk/law-reform/law-reform-projects/joint-projects/surrogacy/.

We have selected 46 questions which may be of particular interest of those with lived experience of surrogacy arrangements: surrogates, intended parents, family members and adult children born of surrogacy arrangements. You do not need to answer all the questions if you do not want to, and you can write as much or as little as you would like in response to our questions.

Please note that we may publish or disclose information you provide us in response to this consultation, including personal information. We ask consultees, when providing their responses, if they could avoid including personal identifying information in the text of their response, particularly where this may reveal the identities of other people involved in their surrogacy arrangement.

For more information about how we consult and how we may use responses to the consultation, please see page i – ii of the Consultation Paper.

Question No.	Consultation Question
Q1	Consultation Question 7. In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have: (1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth, (2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and (3) met eligibility requirements, on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q1	No. The surrogate is the (or a) biological mother of the child: as with all biological parenthood, this is an objective fact in respect of which the parent's feelings and intentions may change. During the pregnancy the surrogate has been offering genuinely maternal care, and she has rights and responsibilities as the birth mother which the law should reflect. Pregnancy makes one already a mother and the law should reflect this in the default position regarding legal parenthood. In contrast, an intended parent who is not genetically related to the child is not yet a parent, even if he/she may become a social parent in due course. Like any other birth mother, regardless of her plans during the pregnancy, the surrogate needs sufficient time after the birth to decide whether she does indeed want to relinquish the child, or whether she has other plans for the child for whose welfare she is responsible in the first instance. The expectation of detachment from the child she has been carrying, on which surrogacy is premised, is not a reasonable expectation and should not be legally or socially endorsed. There are important human values here to protect, bearing in mind that there are other practices disrespectful of women that women themselves can accept and internalise. It is in everyone's interests that pregnancy should be seen by those entering into it as a fully committed, fully parental relationship, not as 'just another job'.

Q2	Consultation Question 11. We provisionally propose that: (1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child; (2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and (3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q2	No. To place the burden on the surrogate to object, especially in such a short time-frame, is unreasonable and unjust. She is the birth mother, and like any other birth mother (including those who intended earlier to relinquish the child for adoption) she should normally be required to take positive action to relinquish the child after a reasonable length of time has elapsed. This is especially the case as processing her feelings following the birth (which may have been physically demanding and traumatic) may not be the work of a few days or even a few weeks. The surrogate may also be confused about the right process for objecting even if she has received advice on this point: must she lose or risk losing legal parenthood forever simply by not objecting in the right form or going slightly over time? (We note in contrast the proposal that there be no time limit for those intended parents who would still need to apply for legal parenthood.) Even where a surrogate will not be raising the child herself, but wants an ongoing relationship with the child, we believe it may be appropriate in some cases for a court to accord some contact rights to the surrogate, as with any biological parent – though the fact that she is not just a biological parent but the birth mother (i.e. the parent who has cared for the child prenatally for many months) means that she should be given a generous amount of time to consider whether she wishes to raise the child herself.
Q3	Consultation Question 12. We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that: (1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child; (2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and (3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood. Do consultees agree?

Your Response to Q3	Yes, although in that case the onus would be on the intended parents to show that the surrogate is an unfit parent. While the rights of the genetic intended parent should also be respected as in the case of any genetic parent not married to the birth mother, pre-birth plans for the child should not dictate post-birth care of the child, any more than with any other pregnancy situation.
Q4	Consultation Question 15. We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.
Your Response to Q4	No. We believe the surrogate's spouse should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement, not least because the spouse will be co-parenting, should the surrogate wish to keep the child and be permitted to do so.
Q5	Consultation Question 27. We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway: (1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and (2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q5	No. The surrogate mother should retain parental responsibility until such time as she cedes it by a positive act or until such time as she has been shown to be unfit to raise the child. The risk is otherwise that even a surrogate who immediately regrets having relinquished the child will be seriously disadvantaged by even a temporary legal assumption that the child will be cared for by the intended parents.
Q6	Consultation Question 28. We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object. Do consultees agree?

Your Response to Q6	Yes. We agree that she should retain parental responsibility (although we disagree concerning her need to take positive action to object under the new pathway and the very short time frame allowed to her to do so).
Q7	Consultation Question 29. For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and (2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.
Your Response to Q7	The model here should be other cases where the biological parents of a child do not live together. The surrogate should be allowed at least the degree of parental responsibility normally accorded a residential or non-residential birth mother respectively.
Q8	Consultation Question 55. We provisionally propose that: (1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available; (2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances: (a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or (b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and (3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q8	No. Our concern is that where, due perhaps to some immediate health problem, the surrogate allows the child to live with the intended parents only temporarily or where a court has determined that the child should live with the intended parents as a temporary measure the surrogate would too easily lose the right to raise the child as a later court will then wish to endorse the status quo.
Q9	Consultation Question 30.

	We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q9	No. We believe the new pathway offers insufficient protections to surrogates generally who may wish to change their mind if they are given sufficient time to do so, and we particularly object to reducing protection in this area for traditional surrogates. While any gestational mother is a biological mother, whether or not she has a genetic relationship to the child, the psychological implications of relinquishment for both the birth mother and the child may be greater where there is both a genetic and a gestational relationship.
Q10	Consultation Question 32. We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway. We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.
Your Response to Q10	No - we believe that the new pathway offers insufficient protections to surrogates and this would also apply to independent surrogacy arrangements being brought within its scope.
Q11	Consultation Question 67. We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway: (1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and (2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q11	Counselling insofar as it constitutes legal and/or personal preparation for surrogacy poses problems in principle, nor can it rectify the fundamental imbalance in surrogacy arrangements and the lack of respect they show for the bonds created by bearing a child. Nevertheless, we believe that any surrogate who has not received implications counselling should be particularly sympathetically considered should she wish to keep the child.
Q12	Consultation Question 68. We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed. Do consultees agree?
Your Response	Click or tap here to enter text. The new pathway offers insufficient protections to surrogates, and preparations for

to Q12	surrogacy pose problems in principle and will not rectify the fundamental imbalance in surrogacy arrangements and the lack of respect they show for the bonds created by bearing a child. Nevertheless, we believe that any surrogate who has not taken independent legal advice should be particularly sympathetically considered should she wish to keep the child.
Q13	Consultation Question 88. We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q13	We agree that all (but only) those financial terms which involve the meeting of post-conception medical expenses for the surrogate in relation to continuing the pregnancy, birth or miscarriage or compensation for the surrogate's injury or death should be enforceable. We agree these should not depend on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.
Q14	Consultation Question 42. We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q14	No. This would create a further demeaning of and commercialisation of pregnancy, and encourage more women, particularly those in financially difficult circumstances, to engage in it.
Q15	Consultation Question 62. We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity: (1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or (2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made. We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.
Your Response to Q15	We are opposed to surrogacy in principle, as an objectification of pregnancy and of the pregnant woman; however we would support the prohibition of at least elective surrogacy on the part of those physically able to carry a child. While we accept that some women find pregnancy psychologically very difficult, we are also aware that such difficulties can sometimes be surmounted so that a positive experience of pregnancy and childbirth then ensues. In no case do we believe that the fragmentation of motherhood and coopting of the body of another woman to gestate the child is a humane or respectful solution. Allowing elective surrogacy increases the risk that such arrangements could become widespread in the future, reinforcing social inequality, and promoting a general view on which pregnancy is seen as merely a job to delegate, not a profound and maternity-creating bond.

Q16	Consultation Question 70. We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.
Your Response to Q16	Those who have not previously given birth should be excluded from the new pathway. Women in this situation are less likely to be aware of the possible impact on them of pregnancy, childbirth and relinquishment. The potential for regret is also clearly increased should the woman subsequently be unable to conceive, gestate and raise a child – perhaps even due to birth complications with her surrogate pregnancy.
Q17	Consultation Question 33. We provisionally propose that: (1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations; (2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and (3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q17	We do not agree that there should be regulated surrogacy organisations as the law should not support or encourage the establishment of such organisations, but we do believe that at least some ways of facilitating surrogacy (e.g. commercially or internationally) should be against the law.
Q18	Consultation Question 35. We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q18	We do not agree that there should be regulated surrogacy organisations as the law should not support or encourage the establishment of such organisations, but we do believe that at least some ways of facilitating surrogacy (e.g. commercially or internationally) should be against the law.
Q19	Consultation Question 37. We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.
Your Response	We are not opposed to legal discouragement of particular surrogacy arrangements which are especially problematic, such as commercial surrogacy or international surrogacy arrangements. Nor are we opposed to giving instructions once a surrogate to Q19	pregnancy is already underway on how best to protect the surrogate and the child. However, we are opposed to issuing positive requirements for surrogacy preparations, and more generally, any requirements aimed at a securing the child's quicker transfer to the intended parents. We also note that a regulator can easily become too close to the organisations it regulates so as to become an advocacy group for the sector, and believe this has indeed happened with the HFEA, which it is proposed should be the regulator for surrogacy.

Q20	Consultation Question 59. We provisionally propose that the new pathway – (1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but (2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements. We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q20	No. Double donation deprives the child, in a pre-planned way, of the care of all biological parents (the gamete providers and the surrogate) and should be prohibited in all surrogacy arrangements. If this requirement is lifted for national arrangements, it should at least be retained for international arrangements; however, it should be retained in both.
Q21	Consultation Question 46. We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q21	Yes.
Q22	Consultation Question 47. We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors. Do consultees agree?

	We provisionally propose that: (1) the register should be maintained by the Authority; (2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include: (a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and (b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and (3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q22	Yes. All available information should be recorded, including identifying information on gamete donors. Surrogacy should not be registered where anonymous donors have been used as this will encourage those who wish to evade UK requirements on this issue to make surrogacy arrangements overseas. A parental order is not a sine qua non for raising a child, and to protect the interests of children in general, such as their interest in knowing their genetic parents, parental orders will sometimes need to be withheld.
Q23	Consultation Question 48. We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.
Your Response to Q23	Yes, although identifying information should also be available to adult surrogate-born individuals. There is much to learn here from the experience of adoptees and donor-conceived people of the significance of knowing one's biological origins, including the person who gave birth to one. This is an important fact about a person's history and part of their full understanding of themselves.
Q24	Consultation Question 49. We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

	(1) where his or her legal parents have consented; (2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or (3) in any other circumstances.
Your Response to Q24	We believe that children should be able to access the register where their legal parents have consented or where a counsellor judges that they are sufficiently mature to receive this information.
Q25	Consultation Question 51. We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.
Your Response to Q25	Yes in both cases. Important as genetic connections are, gestational connections have their own significance as a form of family relationship; moreover, gestational siblings will sometimes be the only contact the surrogate-born person has with the birth family. There is also the concern of those who fear that they may unknowingly form a marital or other sexual relationship with a genetic and/or gestational sibling if such siblings are impossible to identify.
Q26	Consultation Question 52. We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so: (1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or (2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.
Your Response to Q26	We believe that in each case, the siblings should be able to identify each other if both so wish. We note that in the case of donor-conceived people, it has proved to be very significant for some to be able to contact their (half-) siblings, including the social children of the donor. Gestation is another form of biological connection that creates a genuine sibling relationship. There is also the concern of those who fear that they may unknowingly form a marital or other sexual relationship with a genetic and/or gestational sibling if such siblings are impossible to identify.
Q27	Consultation Question 53. For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Your Response to Q27	We do not believe that such an intended parent should be registered: an intended parent is not the same as a parent, and the former partner of someone who goes on to make an application for a parental order has at no time parented the child.
Q28	Consultation Question 72. We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be: (1) based on an allowance; (2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or (3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.
Your Response to Q28	Only receipted medical and related (e.g. travel) costs incurred subsequent to conception/embryo transfer in connection with continuing the pregnancy, miscarriage, birth or post-birth costs should be paid.
Q29	Consultation Question 73. We invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".
Your Response to Q29	We do not support payment of costs prior to pregnancy as this amounts to payment to become a biological mother or at least, a subsidy to become a biological mother on behalf of other people. Nor should a woman who has been paid to become a biological mother in this way be paid to remain so, any more than any parent should be paid for providing basic care for what has become her own child. Paying a woman to gestate a child is no more appropriate than paying a woman for sexual services: in both cases, what should be a highly special and exclusive activity is commodified as if it were 'work' like any other. Only medical and related (e.g. travel) costs directed at sustaining an established pregnancy, delivering the baby or in connection with miscarriage or birth injuries should be paid.
Q30	Consultation Question 74. We invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

Your Response to Q30	Only medical and related (e.g. travel) costs directed at sustaining an established pregnancy, delivering the baby or in connection with miscarriage or birth injuries should be paid.
Q31	Consultation Question 75. We invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and (2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.
Your Response to Q31	Only medical and related (e.g. travel) costs directed at sustaining an established pregnancy, delivering the baby or in connection with miscarriage or birth injuries should be paid.
Q32	Consultation Question 76. We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).
Your Response to Q32	No, we do not believe that surrogates should be paid, and we regard payment for lost earnings as a form of payment for gestation (in contrast, we believe that medical costs in regard to established pregnancy, delivery and post-pregnancy care should be reimbursed).
Q33	Consultation Question 77. We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings: (1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or (2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).
Your Response to Q33	No, we do not believe that surrogates should be paid in either case, as both effectively amount to a form of payment for gestation.
Q34	Consultation Question 78. We invite consultees to share their experiences: (1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and (2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

Your Response to Q34	Medical expenses should not have an effect on means tested benefits, and payments over and above medical expenses should not be legal.
Q35	Consultation Question 79. We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following: (1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth; (2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or (3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy. We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation. We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be: (1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or (2) left to the parties to negotiate.
Your Response to Q35	We do not support payment of expenses prior to pregnancy (2) as this amounts to a payment or subsidy to become a biological mother on others' behalf. Nor should a woman who has become a biological mother in this way be paid to remain so (1) any more than any parent should be paid for providing basic care (albeit sometimes burdensome care) for what has become her own child. While we support reimbursement of genuine medical expenses subsequent to conception, including expenses connected with miscarriage, with a generous cap on the maximum payable, we strongly oppose the payment of expenses for a termination of pregnancy, such as where the baby has a medical condition. Although we consider abortion in this (and other) cases a serious harm to the woman herself, as well as to the baby, abortion for that very reason should not be reimbursed, as a harmful, non-therapeutic and elective procedure. To treat abortion as reimbursable, e.g. in the case of foetal anomaly where the intended parents may request that the surrogate abort, promotes a consumerist attitude to children according to which they are not accepted unconditionally, but only if they meet certain requirements. The promise in advance to pay abortion-related expenses could also be regarded as pressure to terminate on the part of the intending parents, who are likely to take the initiative here.

	surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.
Your Response to Q36	While subsequent to the surrogate's death or injury, it should be possible for intended parents to pay compensation which is morally owed to her/her family, promises or arrangements in advance to do this (via e.g. life assurance) are not the route to compensation we would support as these consitute preparation for the surrogacy itself.
Q37	Consultation Question 81. We invite consultees' views as to whether: (1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and (2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.
Your Response to Q37	No. Intended parents should not be able to buy gifts for the surrogate, not least as this may create emotional pressure to relinquish the child. It may also be seen by both the surrogate and the parents as a form of payment 'in kind' (this applies particularly to expensive presents but also to presents more generally).
Q38	Consultation Question 82. We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be: (1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or (2) a fixed fee set by the regulator. We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee: (1) no other payments; (2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy; (3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy; (4) lost earnings; (5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or (6) gifts.
Your Response to Q38	No payments should be made except reimbursement of medical and related costs in connection with continuing (as opposed to starting or terminating) the pregnancy, and medical costs in connection with birth or miscarriage, together with compensation for death of or injury to the surrogate. While subsequent to the surrogate's death or injury, it should be possible for intended parents to pay compensation which is morally owed to her/her family, promises or arrangements in advance to do this (via e.g. life assurance) are not the route to compensation we would support as these consitute preparation for the surrogacy itself.

Q39	Consultation Question 84. We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q39	No. Only medical and related (e.g. travel) costs directed at sustaining an established pregnancy, delivering the baby or in connection with miscarriage or birth injuries should be paid.
Q40	Consultation Question 85. We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.
Your Response to Q40	No. Only medical and related (e.g. travel) costs directed at sustaining an established pregnancy, delivering the baby or in connection with miscarriage or birth injuries should be paid.
Q41	Consultation Question 92. We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q41	No. International surrogacy should not be streamlined, not least as the international surrogate is likely to be in a weaker legal and social position than a surrogate in Britain. Moreover, if the child is taken from another country, it will be much harder for the child to seek his or her birth mother or connect with the place and culture of his/her natal land. It should not be assumed that the child will be indifferent to these things, or that the surrogate will not wish herself to have some long-term contact with the child. If international surrogacy is effectively encouraged, there may be other e.g. legal problems, despite efforts to address these.
Q42	Consultation Question 94. We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that: (1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or (2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

Your Response to Q42	We do not agree that the process for international surrogacy should be streamlined, not least as the surrogate is likely to be in a weaker position than a surrogate in Britain should she wish to change her mind (and there may be other issues of exploitation such as non-payment of medical expenses). We therefore oppose advance application for a visa, and the bringing of visas within Immigration Rules. If a visa is granted, however, this should not include any requirement for a breaking of links with the surrogate, or any prevention of the child having an on-going relationship with the surrogate (though in practice, such a relationship may be unlikely, not least as the child and the surrogate may not even have a common language).
Q43	Consultation Question 95. We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q43	No. It is no more appropriate to streamline international surrogacy than surrogacy within Britain (in fact, it is less so as the international surrogate is likely to be in a weaker social and legal position).
Q44	Consultation Question 97. We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q44	We agree providing the guide is purely factual, and does not advise intended parents how to prepare for surrogacy, or refer to surrogacy organisations providing such advice.
Q45	Consultation Question 99.

	We provisionally propose that: the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q45	No. This amounts to streamlining of international surrgoacy. The intended parents should be required to apply for a parental order. It is not in principle possible to prevent the exploitation of surrogates where surrogacy is legally permitted. Even where some protective legal measures exist, the Secretary of State may not be well placed to ascertain what the practice is like on the ground in the country in question. Moreover, the welfare of both surrogate and child is in any case further endangered in international surrogacy by the fact that it will be more difficult to identify and contact the surrogate should the adult born of surrogacy wish to do so.
Q46	Consultation Question 107. We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area. We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales. We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.
Your Response to Q46	While we welcome the fact that there is some attention to the rights of the surrogate in the Department guidance, and the stress on the fact that (at present) the surrogate is the legal mother of the baby at birth, we would like to see more stress on protection of the surrogate from any pressure to relinquish the baby and any expectation that she refrain from holding and spending time with the baby, whatever her contract may say to the contrary. We would also urge that the practice of recording in the hospital records the name of the woman who gives birth – the only patient involved – should be followed in every case (we would not, however, object to adding the names of the intended parents, not least as this may be helpful in identifying the child).

100 years would cover the lifetime of most children born of surrogacy. But it will impose a burden on regulated surrogacy organisations. What would happen if an organisation ceased to exist?

17 Consultation Question 10: We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

47 Consultation Question 39: We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I agree there should be a regulator, but I think it should be with a clean slate and a fresh approach. The HFEA has too much history behind it, and I can see a danger of getting bogged down in existing bureaucratic procedures, or ones modelled on the HFEA approach.

Please provide your views below:

48 Consultation Question 40: We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms). Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

On the whole I agree. But I believe some thought needs to be given to the area of gestational surrogacy and enforcement. Given the length and nature of the journey to surrogacy, IP's should have have something to fall back on. Perhaps some form of judicial review in any particular case of disagreement.

Yes, I agree. Having such a hard and fast limit seems inflexible. It seems unreasonable to turn things into a schedule.

Chapter 12: Eligibility Criteria for Both a Parental Order and for the New Pathway

64 Consultation Question 56:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

It seems the best way to avoid exploitation driven internationally.

Please provide your views below:

There needs to be the idea of a home for the child to grow up in. I take it this is what is implied by "habitual residence". The problem I see for a qualifying period is that some families move. This may be for work reasons, for instance, or even in anticipation of an increase in family size.

65 Consultation Question 57:

Please provide your views below:

Defining such qualifying categories in the modern world is a bit like tempting fate. Point (2) seems the appropriate way.

66 Consultation Question 58: We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide views below:

Absolutely. The idea behind surrogacy is to create a family.

67 Consultation Question 59:

Yes

Please provide views below:

I wholeheartedly agree with point (1). The problem I foresee with point (2) is the criterion of medical necessity. The journey to surrogacy for most IP's is a lengthy, stressful and often expensive process (with multiple failed cycles of IVF). Putting the onus on proving medical necessity is yet another round of stress and almost certainly expense.

And what of "medical necessity"? What if the only fertile IP has an inheritable disease? Would that constitute medical necessity? Most IP's on the journey to surrogacy are mature, not only in age but in sensibility. We're capable of making informed decisions without trying to preempt the situation with difficult laws. Whatever definition of "medical necessity" you come up with, I'm certain it will be challenged at some point in a court of law.

Please provide views below:

Double donation should be permitted under both the parental order pathway and the new pathway, without any differentiation. I am not sure how a difference could be justified. It seems inherently unreasonable for a pathway to be preferred/discouraged (lawful/unlawful?) depending upon a person's physical makeup.

No

Please provide views below:

On first thoughts the proposal seems eminently reasonable. But what if double donation is required? Does this then preclude the sourcing of gametes internationally. So I suppose it depends upon what is meant by "international surrogacy arrangements". What if: the gametes are doubly donated (maybe from overseas) but the surrogate and IP's are British and reside in the UK? I suggest we mandate certain countries as being permissable for double donation; eg: Canada.

68 Consultation Question 60: We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

Double donation should be permitted under both the parental order pathway and the new pathway, without differentiation. The above Consultation Question 60, I would believe, is the sort of convoluted law that would result otherwise. Read it again!

69 Consultation Question 61: We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide views below:

This is a case in point regarding the issue of medical necessity. If the criterion wasn't there, this "exception" would not be required

70 Consultation Question 62:

Please provide your views below:

First of all, I don't think it wise for there to be a distinction at all, vis-a-vis medical necessity, between the new pathway and the parental order pathway. It would make for bad law.

Secondly, if you accept that, then in my opinion the idea falls! Why? Because refusing a parental order on the grounds of failure to prove medical necessity would be cruel, especially when surrogate and IP's were singing from the same sheet.

Please provide your views below:

I think the idea of medical necessity is flawed. As the consultation document states, we don't have much of a problem (if any) in the UK regarding abuse of surrogacy by IP's. For goodness sake, the journey is difficult enough as it is! I think the law best left as it is, and we reform as and when abuse arises.

What would "a" test consist of? Certainly not a single medical procedure. That would be naive. From my earlier comment: What if the only fertile IP had an inheritable disease? Would that constitute medical necessity? Whatever definition of "medical necessity" you come up with, I'm certain it will be challenged at some point in a court of law.

71 Consultation Question 63:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Please provide your views below:

Agree with point (1); ie: those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

I don't agree with point (2) because :
(a) It excludes double donation.
(b) It would simply increase stress and expense. And
(c) What if the condition were not met? It would seem to me to be cruel in the extreme, and damaging to all parties.

Yes

Please provide your views below:

72 Consultation Question 64:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Very sensible. Proviso: I'm not sure what you're trying to imply in the second sentence is valid. It's not the age of the IP's but their suitability; eg: that they don't have any terminal or debilitating illness. Given our ageing population, we should not discriminate on the basis of age.

Please provide your views below:

Under the new pathway (as well as the parental order pathway!) there should not be a maximum age limit for intended parents. The journey is difficult enough as it is. Most (actually I would say 'all') surrogates make very serious informed decisions regarding IP's. At one SUK conference that I attended, where a social scientist from Cambridge gave a presentation, the conclusive idea given by the scientist was summarised as (and I think this is word perfect): "Surrogates look for a strong relationship, and make it stronger".

It seems a sensible requirement. But it is yet another hurdle, and maybe more expense. SUK are very good at vetting membership, whether of IP's or surrogates.

76 Consultation Question 68: We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed. I would argue against this, on the grounds of experience. I have known a surrogate who has had multiple surrogacy births, but has no children of her own. So I think this would be too restrictive.

80 Consultation Question 72:

based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or

Please provide your views below:

My background position regarding payment is that surrogacy should be altruistic.

Surrogacy is very, very dependent on a relationship of trust between IP's and surrogates.

81 Consultation Question 73:

Please provide your views below:

Payment of essential costs comes within the bounds of altruism, so "Yes". I would suggest essential would be related to pregnancy or allied expenses; eg: child care whilst the surrogate attends antenatal clinic.

82 Consultation Question 74:

Please provide your views below:

Again the answer is "Yes". It seems sensible, for example, to pay for things related to social activities involving IP's and surrogates.

88 Consultation Question 80: We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

Please provide your views below:

The idea of a life assurance policy is sensible. I cannot see an objection to IP's funding this. Anything else is too open-ended and would act as a restriction.

89 Consultation Question 81:

Please provide your views below:

Given the necessity of trust and friendship, gifts would seem appropriate. But they should be modest and reasonable in nature. There should be specific provision for this.

90 Consultation Question 82:

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

Surrogacy should be altruistic. If we step outside this, we could open a Pandora's box of problems.

This discriminates against those who must rely upon double donation. It is particularly likely to cause distress to single IP's

Please provide your views below:

In both situations, why impose yet another hurdle (and expense?) on an already stressful journey? I can see it causing mental and financial problems. In fact, it may cause mental anguish for those who have and those who have not an acceptable "medical necessity".

Also the definition of medical necessity will cause problems. For example, infertility will not cover people who suffer from some form of inheritable disease.

122 Consultation Question 114:

Please provide your views below:

123 Consultation Question 115:

Please provide your views below:

(1) Allowing double donation will increase accessibility, since by its very nature it allows a greater number of people to become IP's.

(2) Despite the above, I feel the aspect of medical necessity, if it is interpreted as being infertility, will impose an unnecessary restriction (eg: for those who are fertile but have an inheritable or potentially inheritable disease). We don't have much of a problem (if any) in the UK, so i suspect even a broader definition of medical necessity will be unduly restrictive.

(2) Allowing commercial surrogacy - even if not-for-profit - will I believe add to / raise the cost of surrogacy. Any increase in cost on what is an already expensive process will inevitably restrict access.

Question No.	Consultation Question
Q1	Consultation Question 7. In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have: (1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth, (2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and (3) met eligibility requirements, on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q1	Agree
Q2	Consultation Question 11. We provisionally propose that:

Your Response to Q2	Agree
Q3	Consultation Question 12. We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that: (1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child; (2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and (3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q3	Agree
Q4	Consultation Question 15. We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.
Your Response to Q4	Agree
Q5	Consultation Question 27.

	We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway: (1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and (2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q5	Agree
Q6	Consultation Question 28. We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q6	Disagree – in the case of Gestational Surrogacy the parental responsibility (eg child is cared for by IPs) should be with the Intended Parents from birth if an agreement is in place.
Q7	Consultation Question 29. For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and (2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.
Your Response to Q7	If an agreement is in place and all guidance followed prior to pregnancy, with GS, the child should remain with IPs and the IPs should have full parental responsibility.
Q8	Consultation Question 55. We provisionally propose that: (1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available; (2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

	(a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or (b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and (3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q8	Agree
Q9	Consultation Question 30. We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q9	Agree
Q10	Consultation Question 32. We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway. We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.
Your Response to Q10	Agree Independent arrangements (GS) still follow guidelines/have agreements in place and abide by the strict rules set by clinics before a surrogacy pregnany occurs. TS journey's would benefit from joining the new pathway to provide more protection for both Surrogates and IPs
Q11	Consultation Question 67. We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway: (1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and (2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15. Do consultees agree?

Your Response to Q11	Agree
Q12	Consultation Question 68. We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q12	Research on the internet can provide you with the same information as legal advice so only if this provides you with additional support or benefit.
Q13	Consultation Question 88. We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q13	First part yes. Second – that would depend, if surrogate started taking illegal drugs or drinking that would be unacceptable. Lifestyle should be discussed prior to an agreement being signed, additional demands on either side (unless acceptable to both sides) are unacceptable post agreement.
Q14	Consultation Question 42. We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q14	Agree
Q15	Consultation Question 62. We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity: (1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or (2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

	We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.
Your Response to Q15	As far as I'm aware clinics in the UK won't allow surrogacy without it being a medical necessity.
Q16	Consultation Question 70. We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.
Your Response to Q16	This should be determined by the surrogate, as long as they pass physical and mental assessment it's their body and should be their choice.
Q17	Consultation Question 33. We provisionally propose that: (1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations; (2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and (3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q17	Agree
Q18	Consultation Question 35. We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q18	Agree
Q19	Consultation Question 37. We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

Your Response to Q19	Agree
Q20	Consultation Question 59. We provisionally propose that the new pathway – (1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but (2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements. We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q20	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q21	Consultation Question 46. We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q21	Agree
Q22	Consultation Question 47. We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that: (1) the register should be maintained by the Authority; (2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include: (a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and (b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and (3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies. Do consultees agree?

Your Response to Q22	Agree
Q23	Consultation Question 48. We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.
Your Response to Q23	Agree
Q24	Consultation Question 49. We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances: (1) where his or her legal parents have consented; (2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or (3) in any other circumstances.
Your Response to Q24	Agree
Q25	Consultation Question 51.

	We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.
Your Response to Q25	Agree
Q26	Consultation Question 52. We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so: (1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or (2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.
Your Response to Q26	Agree
Q27	Consultation Question 53. For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.
Your Response to Q27	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q28	Consultation Question 72. We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be: (1) based on an allowance; (2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or (3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.
Your Response to Q28	he way it happens currently appears to be effective e.g. surrogate calculates approximate pregnancy expenses (childcare/mileage/loss of earnings/clothing/medication/food/recoup break etc.) This is split into monthly payments from positive test until birth and any unforeseen expenses are covered by IPs as and when required.

Q29	Consultation Question 73. We invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".
Your Response to Q29	As above.
Q30	Consultation Question 74. We invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.
Your Response to Q30	Additional costs not covered in standard expenses would be unexpected expenses caused by medical issues (time off work – upaid, unexpected childcare)
Q31	Consultation Question 75. We invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and (2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.
Your Response to Q31	As stated previously all pregnancy expenses, essential and additional should be paid by IP's.
Q32	Consultation Question 76. We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).
Your Response to Q32	If loss of earnings has been occurred due to the pregnancy then yes it should be paid by IPs.
Q33	Consultation Question 77. We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings: (1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or

	(2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).
Your Response to Q33	If the agreement is based on expenses occurred due to the pregnancy then yes but if these questions are based on a commercial arrangement where are a large fee is in place then no, all additional expenses should be covered as part of the commercial arrangement.
Q34	Consultation Question 78. We invite consultees to share their experiences: (1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and (2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.
Your Response to Q34	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q35	Consultation Question 79. We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following: (1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth; (2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or (3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy. We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation. We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be: (1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or (2) left to the parties to negotiate.
Your Response to Q35	Currently all of these eventualities are included within the guidelines and covered as part of the expenses. It works well as it is and should be left to the parties to negotiate.
Q36	Consultation Question 80.

	We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.
Your Response to Q36	Life assurance should be obtained by all surrogates and paid for by the IPs.
Q37	Consultation Question 81. We invite consultees' views as to whether: (1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and (2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.
Your Response to Q37	If an IP wants to buy the surrogate a gift that should be allowed without interference from the external bodies.
Q38	Consultation Question 82. We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be: (1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or (2) a fixed fee set by the regulator. We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee: (1) no other payments; (2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy; (3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy; (4) lost earnings; (5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or (6) gifts.
Your Response to Q38	My view is that surrogacy should remain as expenses only so 2,3,4,5 & 6 from the above list are acceptable expenses. I don't think a fixed fee is appropriate. If that is the way forward I think it should only be a fixed fee and no additional expenses should be paid by IPs. The fixed fee should be set by a regulator.

Q39	Consultation Question 84. We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q39	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q40	Consultation Question 85. We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.
Your Response to Q40	Click or tap here to enter text.
Q41	Consultation Question 92. We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q41	Agree
Q42	Consultation Question 94. We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that: (1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or (2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

	Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.
Your Response to Q42	Agree
Q43	Consultation Question 95. We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q43	Agree
Q44	Consultation Question 97. We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q44	Agree
Q45	Consultation Question 99. We provisionally propose that: the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q45	Agree

Q46	Consultation Question 107. We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area. We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales. We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.
Your Response to Q46	That all hospitals are educated on surrogacy and have up to date policies in place. That the IPs are allowed in the birth suite (if surrogate agrees), make decisions regarding their child and allowed to leave the hospital with their child. That surrogates are treated with respect and their wishes listened to, for example being allowed to leave hospital if they wish and leave child with IPs.

Chapter 6: The parental order procedure

8 Consultation Question 1:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Yes. All International surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a Judge of the High Court. There is a history of International surrogacy abuse and exploitation and a high level of scrutiny should be maintained.

10 Consultation Question 3: We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Chapter 8: Legal Parenthood: Proposals for Reform - A New Pathway

14 Consultation Question 7:

No

Please provide your views below:

No. The Intended parents should not be documented as the legal parents at birth. This would reduce the birth mother to a vessel, a container, such knowledge of which would be detrimental to the mental health of the child, and against the healthy formation of their identity. This proposal weakens the surrogate's right to change her mind.

Its absurd to wipe the actual biological parents from this human being's birth record. Everyone has the right to truth even if it hurts someones feelings.

16 Consultation Question 9: We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

The prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements, otherwise this limits the right of the child to discover their genetic identity and may risk attraction to closely related persons.

17 Consultation Question 10: We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

18 Consultation Question 11:

No

Please provide your views below:

One week? Are you mad? Some mums will barely have recovered by then. And the baby needs more than a week with their birth mother for optimal health and attachment. Birth mums should always have the right to change their mind, and intensive therapy in advance to ask why they think this is a harmless act for them and their child.

19 Consultation Question 12:

No

Please provide your views below:

If a mum gives birth to a child, it's her child. No one else should have any right to take that child away. For context [redacted]. The childs rights to a relationship with its mother come first.

20 Consultation Question 13:

No

Please provide your views below:

This sort of statement is meaningless isn't it? "She seemed to have capacity to me" means sod all.

21 Consultation Question 14:

No

Please provide your views below:

Have you lot read anything about attachment disorder? Tearing a baby away from a birth parent intentionally will have effects later in life. You should absolutely be monitoring welfare.

24 Consultation Question 17: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.Do consultees agree?

29 Consultation Question 22:

Please provide your views below:

I completely agree with this and couldn't put it better: The surrogacy business should be banned not made easier. There is no evidence in the proposed changes that the surrogacy business, which benefits Agencies, lawyers and those commissioning a surrogate (who is expected to carry a child as an altruistic act) should be made easier for those who profit. The evidence points to banning or severely restricting surrogacy practices as has been done in European countries such as Switzerland, France, Germany and Sweden and further afield in India and Thailand.

38 Consultation Question 31: We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

Please provide your views below:

Can I speak as someone who chose not to pursue this? Two words - attachment disorder. Using a surrogate is akin to intentionally creating an orphan. No one should be purposefully removing an infant from the mother it has bonded with and needs.

Chapter 10: Children's Access to Information About Surrogacy Arrangements

51 Consultation Question 43: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Yes and the original birth certificate should be honest, not a fantasy document for the sake of the adoptive parents.

52 Consultation Question 44: We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

Yes, they might as well know who bought and sold them.

53 Consultation Question 45: We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

Absolutely. If people can retrospectively change the biological sex on their certificate, it makes a mockery of even having them. Why bother? Are birth certificates needed? If so why can facts be altered and lied about?

54 Consultation Question 46: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

Hah! So here they should have counselling first - but prospective birth mothers don't seem to need that in advance, from your other questions, and apparently the children don't need it for any other reason (like attachment disorders as they grow up).

No, just when the prospective adoptive parents don't want them finding out something. That's charming.

Please provide your views below:

Everyone has a right to know where they come from. Why do you think they need counselling? If they do, why do you think it's acceptable to create them and put them in that position?

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

(1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason, these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

(2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

(1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and

(2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason, these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration.

Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

(1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;

(2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or

(3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

(1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,

(2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and

(3) met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

1.12 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;

(2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and

(3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

(1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;

(2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and

(3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;

(2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and

(3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

(1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;

(2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and

(3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.17 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

(1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and

(2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.19 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Paragraph 8.77

Consultation Question 17.

1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

1.21 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

1.22 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

1.23 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

(1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:

(a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and

(b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or

(2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

1.24 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

(1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;

(2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and

(3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.25 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and

(2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.26 We invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and

(2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:

(a) administrative, or

(b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.27 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and

(2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.28 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and

(2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.29 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

(1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and

(2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.31 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and

(2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.32 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the 'intended parents' should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women's reproductive capacities.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.33 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

(2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.140

Consultation Question 30.

1.34 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

1.35 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

N/A

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.36 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.37 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.38 We provisionally propose that:

(1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.39 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

(1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;

(2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;

(3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;

(4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and

(5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

LEAVE ALL CHECK BOXES BLANK (i.e. none of the above)

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.40 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.42 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.44 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.45 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.46 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.47 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

1.48 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

1.49 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

1.50 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

1.51 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.52 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.53 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.54 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.55 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.56 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.57 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;

(2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:

(a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and

(b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and

(3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

1.59 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.60 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

(1) where his or her legal parents have consented;

(2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or

(3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

1.62 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.63 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.64 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

(1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or

(2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.65 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.66 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.67 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

(2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

(a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or

(b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and

(3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.68 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.69 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.70 We invite consultees' views on whether:

(1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or

(2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

1.71 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

1.72 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

(1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but

(2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.73 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

1.74 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 12.64

Consultation Question 60.

1.75 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.76 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.77 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

(1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or

(2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.79 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.80 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

(1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or

(2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.81 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.82 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.83 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood.

I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.84 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.85 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.86 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.87 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.88 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

(1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and

(2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.90 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.91 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

(1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;

(2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and

(3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.92 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.94 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

(1) based on an allowance;

(2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or

(3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and

(2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.29

Consultation Question 76.

1.99 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

(1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or

(2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.101 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

(1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and

(2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

(1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;

(2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or

(3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.103 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

(1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or

(2) left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.105 We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and

(2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. (check box)

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

(1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or

(2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

(1) no other payments;

(2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;

(3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;

(4) lost earnings;

(5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or

(6) gifts.

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to make any type of fee or payment to the birth mother for her 'services'.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.110 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

(1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;

(2) to any miscarriage or termination; or

(3) some other period of time (please specify).

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

1.112 We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Paragraph 15.74

Consultation Question 85.

1.113 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

1.114 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.115 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

(1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and

(2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

1.116 We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.117 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

Paragraph 15.99

Consultation Question 89.

1.118 We invite overseas surrogates (or bodies representing or advocating for surrogates) to share with us their experiences f international surrogacy arrangements.

N/A

Paragraph 16.10

Consultation Question 90.

1.119 We invite organisations focused on children's rights and welfare in the international context to share with us their views on our proposed reforms and consultation questions in this chapter.

N/A

Paragraph 16.12

Consultation Question 91.

1.120 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of their experience of applying to register a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement as a British citizen and obtaining a passport for the child. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have about causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.53

Consultation Question 93.

1.122 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.68

Consultation Question 94.

1.123 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport before the child is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

1.124 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.125 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or

(2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.126 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.127 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

1.128 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.129 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.130 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.131 We provisionally propose that:

1.132 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.133 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.134 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.135 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.137 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and

(2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself.

There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.144 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.145 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.146 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

(1) when the child was born;

(2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;

(3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and

(4) whether they are a:

(a) opposite-sex couple;

(b) male same-sex couple;

(c) female same-sex couple;

(d) single woman; or

(e) single man.

Paragraph 18.2

Consultation Question 110.

1.147 We invite consultees who have experience of applying for a parental order in the UK to tell us:

(1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;

(2) whether they had legal advice before the making of the parental order;

(3) whether they were represented by a lawyer in court; and

(4) the cost of any legal advice or representation.

N/A

Paragraph 18.4

Consultation Question 111.

1.148 We invite consultees' views as to the impact (social, emotional, financial or otherwise) of the current law where the intended parents are not the legal parents from birth of the child born of the surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 18.6

Consultation Question 112.

1.149 We invite consultees to tell us what they have paid for, or to provide evidence about the cost of:

(1) medical screening; and

(2) implications counselling

(where possible separating out the cost of such screening, tests or implications counselling from any other costs involved with fertility treatment).

N/A

1.150 We invite legal consultees, who advise on surrogacy and parental order proceedings, to provide evidence of what they would charge:

(1) to provide advice sufficient to meet the proposed requirement for independent legal advice discussed in Chapter 13; and

(2) to draft, advise on and negotiate the written surrogacy agreement required for the new pathway.

N/A

Paragraph 18.8

Consultation Question 113.

1.151 We invite consultees to tell us of the impact of:

(1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and

(2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:

(a) in the new pathway;

(b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or

(c) in both situations.

Paragraph 18.11

Consultation Question 114.

1.152 We invite consultees who consider that they might be able to fulfil the role of the independent professional discussed in Chapter 9 to tell us:

(1) their profession; and

(2) what they would charge to provide such a service.

N/A

Paragraph 18.13

Consultation Question 115.

1.153 We invite consultees who are intended parents to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

(1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and

(2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

1.154 We invite consultees who are surrogates to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

(1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and

(2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

Paragraph 18.15

Consultation Question 116.

1.155 We ask consultees who are intended parents to tell us:

(1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;

(2) what they spent, in total, on the surrogacy arrangement(s) that led to the birth of their child(ren), including the cost of fertility treatment, payments to the surrogate and payments to any surrogacy agency or organisation;

Consultation Question 117.

1.156 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.157 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Chapter 6: The parental order procedure

8 Consultation Question 1:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

9 Consultation Question 2:

Please provide your views below:

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

10 Consultation Question 3: We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Please provide your views below:

11 Consultation Question 4:

No

Please provide your views below:

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

12 Consultation Question 5: We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the Family Procedure Rules 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise. Do consultees agree?

Chapter 8: Legal Parenthood: Proposals for Reform - A New Pathway

14 Consultation Question 7:

No

Please provide your views below:

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations

Another period

Please provide your views below:

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

16 Consultation Question 9: We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

17 Consultation Question 10: We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

18 Consultation Question 11:

Other

Please provide your views below:

There should be no denied period to change ones mind. I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

19 Consultation Question 12:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

20 Consultation Question 13:

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

21 Consultation Question 14:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

22 Consultation Question 15:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

Yes

Please share your views below:

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

23 Consultation Question 16:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

24 Consultation Question 17: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

25 Consultation Question 18: For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

26 Consultation Question 19:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

Please provide your views below:

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Yes

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

28 Consultation Question 21: We invite consultees' views as to: (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. 30 Consultation Question 23:

Please provide your views below:

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

Please provide your views below:

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. 32 Consultation Question 25: We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Please provide your views below:

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

33 Consultation Question 26:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

42 Consultation Question 35: We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

43 Consultation Question 36: We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

46 Consultation Question 38: We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

Please provide your views below:

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

47 Consultation Question 39: We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood. I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution

50 Consultation Question 42: We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Chapter 10: Children's Access to Information About Surrogacy Arrangements

51 Consultation Question 43: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18. Do consultees agree?

52 Consultation Question 44: We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

53 Consultation Question 45: We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

Please provide your views below:

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

54 Consultation Question 46: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.Do consultees agree?

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

56 Consultation Question 48: We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

Please provide your views below:

62 Consultation Question 54: We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished. Do consultees agree?

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

63 Consultation Question 55:

68 Consultation Question 60: We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order. Do consultees agree?

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the ‘new pathway’ and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a ‘medical necessity.’

69 Consultation Question 61: We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent’s former partner provides gametes but the intended parents’ relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order. 72 Consultation Question 64:

No

Please provide your views below:

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

79 Consultation Question 71: We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.Do consultees agree?

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Please provide your views below:

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

86 Consultation Question 78:

87 Consultation Question 79:

Please provide your views below:

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present or even present immediately.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

107 Consultation Question 99:

No

Please provide your views below:

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

115 Consultation Question 107:

Please provide your views below:

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself. There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the fac

116 Consultation Question 108: We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

Please provide your views below:

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

126 Consultation Question 118: We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this Consultation Paper.

Please provide your views below:

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only had them harvested, farmed and paid for.

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

(1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

(2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

(1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and

(2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration.

Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

(1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;

(2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or

(3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

(1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,

(2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and

(3) met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

1.12 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;

(2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and

(3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

(1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;

(2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and

(3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. * https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;

(2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and

(3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

(1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;

(2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and

(3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.17 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

(1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and

(2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.19 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Paragraph 8.77

Consultation Question 17.

1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

1.21 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

1.22 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

1.23 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

(1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:

(a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and

(b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or

(2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

1.24 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

(1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;

(2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and

(3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.25 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and

(2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.26 We invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and

(2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:

(a) administrative, or

(b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.27 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and

(2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.28 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and

(2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.29 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

(1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and

(2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.31 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and

(2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.32 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the 'intended parents' should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women's reproductive capacities.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.33 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

(2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.140

Consultation Question 30.

1.34 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

1.35 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

N/A

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.36 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.37 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.38 We provisionally propose that:

(1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.39 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

(1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;

(2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;

(3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;

(4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and

(5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

LEAVE ALL CHECK BOXES BLANK (i.e. none of the above)

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.40 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.42 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.44 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.45 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.46 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.47 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

1.48 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

1.49 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

1.50 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

1.51 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.52 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.53 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.54 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.55 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.56 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.57 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;

(2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:

(a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and

(b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and

(3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

1.59 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.60 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

(1) where his or her legal parents have consented;

(2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or

(3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

1.62 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.63 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.64 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

(1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or

(2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.65 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.66 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.67 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

(2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

(a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or

(b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and

(3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.68 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.69 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.70 We invite consultees' views on whether:

(1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or

(2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

1.71 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

1.72 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

(1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but

(2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.73 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

1.74 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 12.64

Consultation Question 60.

1.75 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.76 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.77 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

(1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or

(2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.79 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.80 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

(1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or

(2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.81 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.82 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.83 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood.

I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.84 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.85 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.86 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for a 'new pathway'. At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.87 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.88 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

(1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and

(2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.90 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.91 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

(1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;

(2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and

(3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.92 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.94 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

(1) based on an allowance;

(2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or

(3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and

(2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.29

Consultation Question 76.

1.99 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

(1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or

(2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.101 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

(1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and

(2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

(1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;

(2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or

(3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.103 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

(1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or

(2) left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.105 We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and

(2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. (check box)

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

(1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or

(2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

(1) no other payments;

(2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;

(3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;

(4) lost earnings;

(5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or

(6) gifts.

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to make any type of fee or payment to the birth mother for her 'services'.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.110 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

(1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;

(2) to any miscarriage or termination; or

(3) some other period of time (please specify).

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

1.112 We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Paragraph 15.74

Consultation Question 85.

1.113 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

1.114 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.115 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

(1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and

(2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

1.116 We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.117 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

Consultation Question 91.

1.120 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of their experience of applying to register a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement as a British citizen and obtaining a passport for the child. Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.53

Consultation Question 93.

1.122 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. Paragraph 16.68

Consultation Question 94.

1.123 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport before the child is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling

1.124 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.125 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or

(2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.126 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.127 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

1.128 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.129 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.130 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.131 We provisionally propose that:

1.132 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.133 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.134 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.135 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.137 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and

(2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself.

There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.144 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.145 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.146 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

(1) when the child was born;

(2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;

(3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and

(4) whether they are a:

(a) opposite-sex couple;

(b) male same-sex couple;

(c) female same-sex couple;

(d) single woman; or

(e) single man.

N/A

Paragraph 18.2

Consultation Question 112.

1.149 We invite consultees to tell us what they have paid for, or to provide evidence about the cost of:

(1) medical screening; and

(where possible separating out the cost of such screening, tests or implications counselling from any other costs involved with fertility treatment).

N/A

1.150 We invite legal consultees, who advise on surrogacy and parental order proceedings, to provide evidence of what they would charge:

(1) to provide advice sufficient to meet the proposed requirement for independent legal advice discussed in Chapter 13; and

(2) to draft, advise on and negotiate the written surrogacy agreement required for the new pathway.

N/A

Paragraph 18.8

1.151 We invite consultees to tell us of the impact of:

(1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and

(2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:

(a) in the new pathway;

(b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or

(c) in both situations.

Paragraph 18.11

Consultation Question 114.

1.152 We invite consultees who consider that they might be able to fulfil the role of the independent professional discussed in Chapter 9 to tell us:

(1) their profession; and

(2) what they would charge to provide such a service.

Paragraph 18.13

Consultation Question 115.

1.153 We invite consultees who are intended parents to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

(1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and

(2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

1.154 We invite consultees who are surrogates to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

N/A

Paragraph 18.15

Consultation Question 116.

1.155 We ask consultees who are intended parents to tell us:

(1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;

(2) what they spent, in total, on the surrogacy arrangement(s) that led to the birth of their child(ren), including the cost of fertility treatment, payments to the surrogate and payments to any surrogacy agency or organisation;

(3) how they raised the funds for the surrogacy arrangement(s);

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.156 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.157 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Chapter 8: Legal Parenthood: Proposals for Reform - A New Pathway

14 Consultation Question 7:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

We acknowledge that different members of the team had differing opinions on this question, however, the majority of our team agreed with this proposal. We recognise that it will bring greater certainty to the surrogacy process and ensure that it accurately reflects the intention of all of the parties involved in the surrogacy arrangement. The new pathway ensures that proper safeguards are in place, and balances the rights of the intended parents, the surrogate and the child.

18 Consultation Question 11:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

We agree to this proposal, subject to the surrogates right to object being extended. The proposal as drafted provides that the period for objection should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week. In Scotland, this means that a surrogate would only have two weeks to object. We do not think that two weeks is a sufficient time frame to protect the surrogate mother's rights when having regard to the fact that the surrogate mother will most likely still be recovering from childbirth.

19 Consultation Question 12:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

We agree with this proposal. If the surrogate mother exercises her right to object, we agree that the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood. We also agree that the surrogate should be the legal parent of the child as this will safeguard and strengthen her right to object.

34 Consultation Question 27:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

We agree with the proposal that the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child. It will enable the intended parents to make decisions on behalf of their child from birth, which a parent would normally do as a matter of course, for example, decisions relating to the child's education and medical care.We support the proposal that if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibly where the child is living with them and they intend to apply for a parental order.

35 Consultation Question 28: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

We agree that a surrogate mother should retain PRRs until such time as she has not exercised her right to object to the surrogacy. A surrogate mother losing PRRs before this period would create issues for the surrogate mother in exercising her right to object and in any following court action.

36 Consultation Question 29:

Please provide your views below:

We consider that there are a number of complications in relation to the sharing of parental responsibilities and right where parties are in dispute, as there are in any child related case when the holders of PRRs disagree as to how they should be exercised. We are not convinced a restriction of the ability to exercise PRRs will necessarily solve these issues. If rights are to be held, there is a strong case for them to be held equally and where disputes cannot be resolved, then recourse to the courts, as the ultimately decision makers, whilst undesirably, may be the most appropriate forum to resolve these disputes having applied the welfare principle.

Chapter 9: The Regulation of Surrogacy Arrangements

39 Consultation Question 32:

Please provide your views below:

We agree it would be beneficial to bring independent surrogacy arrangements within the scope of the new pathway to improve regulation, through care and after care, where appropriate, for example legal advice and counselling. The essence of such arrangements are independent and parties may choose this route for that very reason, however, so the practicalities for the regulators bringing these arrangements within the pathway is likely to be challenging without the benefit of the process for the new pathway coming into effect automatically. We consider insight and feedback from parties who have gone down the independent surrogacy route would be most beneficial in gauging views as to the willingness of parties to such agreements to be brought within the new pathway

We are not opposed to such a proposal. However, we do believe that issues of access to such a register are important points to consider before such a proposal is implemented. Clearly, issues of information control and human rights are engaged.

We recognise that these proposals are dependent on adoption of the new pathway.

(1) We agree that the holder of this information should be the Authority.
(2) We recognise that there is an issue that a register of information may prevent or discourage potential donors.
(3) We do see issues with collection of the information. If a register is to be relied upon then the holder of the register must be given the powers to enforce collection of information.

56 Consultation Question 48: We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

We agree with this proposal. We recognise that this type of agreement has various implications including health, legal, financial and emotional implications. Counselling allow parties to recognise these implications, discuss them with a qualified and experienced counsellor and decide the best course of action.
We believe that counselling should be regulated and counsellors should follow a regime to ensure a uniform practice across the country. We agree that counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements in the Code of Practice at paragraph 2.14. However, we recognise issues with appointing a generic counsellor who is not a fertility specialist, as per paragraph 2.15 of the Code of Practice.

Please provide your views below:

We agree with this proposal. We recognise the issues arising where a child is unable to obtain a passport prior to birth. In particular, where a child is to acquire British citizenship through registration, that child is in effect in limbo until the Certificate of Registration is issued. There needs to be further clarity on this scenario and clear guidance issued. We also recognise an issue with allowing a passport to be obtained prior to the birth of the child if the surrogate has an opportunity to object once the child is born.

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

(1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

(2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

(1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and

(2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

(1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;

(2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or

(3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

(1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,

(2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and

(3) met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

1.12 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;

(2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and

(3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

(1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;

(2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and

(3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;

(2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and

(3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

(1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;

(2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and

(3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

›nsultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.17 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

(1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and

(2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.19 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Paragraph 8.77

Consultation Question 17.

1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

1.21 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

1.22 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

1.23 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

(1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:

(a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and

(b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or

(2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

1.24 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

(1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;

(2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and

(3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.25 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and

(2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.26 We invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and

(2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:

(a) administrative, or

(b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.27 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and

(2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.28 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and

(2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.29 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

(1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and

(2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.31 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and

(2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.32 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the 'intended parents' should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women's reproductive capacities.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.33 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

(2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.140

Consultation Question 30.

1.34 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

1.35 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

N/A

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.36 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.37 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.38 We provisionally propose that:

(1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.39 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

(1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;

(2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;

(3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;

(4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and

(5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

LEAVE ALL CHECK BOXES BLANK (i.e. none of the above)

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.40 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.42 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.44 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.45 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.46 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.47 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

1.48 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

1.49 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

1.50 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

1.51 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.52 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.53 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.54 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.55 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.56 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.57 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;

(2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:

(a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and

(b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and

(3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

1.59 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.60 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

(1) where his or her legal parents have consented;

(2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or

(3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

1.62 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.63 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.64 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

(1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or

(2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.65 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.66 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.67 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

(2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

(a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or

(b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and

(3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.68 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.69 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.70 We invite consultees' views on whether:

(1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or

(2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

1.71 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

1.72 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

(1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but

(2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.73 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

1.74 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 12.64

Consultation Question 60.

1.75 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.76 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.77 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

(1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or

(2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.79 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.80 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

(1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or

(2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.81 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.82 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.83 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.84 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.85 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.86 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.87 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.88 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

(1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and

(2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.90 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.91 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

(1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;

(2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and

(3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.92 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.94 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

(1) based on an allowance;

(2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or

(3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and

(2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.29

Consultation Question 76.

1.99 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

(1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or

(2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.101 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

(1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and

(2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

(1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;

(2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or

(3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.103 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

(1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or

(2) left to the parties to negotiate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.105 We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

I find it alarming that this consultation assumes that the issue of 'procreative liberty' takes precendence over a woman's life. I can't think of another instance where a citizen would be 'encouraged' to undertake an activity which would have potentially fatal consequences. As I go through these questions, it seems more and more as if the women and children involved are seen as commodities, to the point where you merely ask if the surrogate may be insured as one would a house or a car. I find it baffling that you can categorise the desire for a child with a 'medical need', which could be balanced by buying the reproductive capacity of a woman who means nothing to you, I can't see how this could be endorsed by a civilised country.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and

(2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. (check box)

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

(1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or

(2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

(1) no other payments;

(2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;

(3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;

(4) lost earnings;

(5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or

(6) gifts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to make any type of fee or payment to the birth mother for her 'services'.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.110 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

(1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;

(2) to any miscarriage or termination; or

(3) some other period of time (please specify).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

1.112 We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Paragraph 15.74

Consultation Question 85.

1.113 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

1.114 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.115 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

(1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and

(2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

1.116 We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.117 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

Paragraph 15.99

Consultation Question 89.

1.118 We invite overseas surrogates (or bodies representing or advocating for surrogates) to share with us their experiences f international surrogacy arrangements.

N/A

Paragraph 16.10

Consultation Question 90.

1.119 We invite organisations focused on children's rights and welfare in the international context to share with us their views on our proposed reforms and consultation questions in this chapter.

N/A

Paragraph 16.12

Consultation Question 91.

1.120 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of their experience of applying to register a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement as a British citizen and obtaining a passport for the child. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have about causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.53

Consultation Question 93.

1.122 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.68

Consultation Question 94.

1.123 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport before the child is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

1.124 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.125 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or

(2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.126 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.127 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

1.128 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.129 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.130 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.131 We provisionally propose that:

1.132 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.133 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.134 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.135 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.137 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and

(2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself. There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.144 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.145 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.146 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

(1) when the child was born;

(2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;

(3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and

(1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and

(2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:

(a) in the new pathway;

(b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.156 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.157 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Chapter 6: The parental order procedure

8 Consultation Question 1:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

I am concerned that women in countries where they have fewer opportunities than women in the UK would be pressured into having children. There are many risks to mothers in pregnancy and women in desperate situations need to be protected from abuse. Trafficking children and exploiting birth mothers is wrong, these are human rights issues of utmost seriousness. Babies and wombs are not for sale.

Please provide your views below:

9 Consultation Question 2:

Please provide your views below:

All surrogacy cases should be held by senior judges - sale and trafficking of children is wrong and children should be protected. Birth mothers also need protection.

10 Consultation Question 3: We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Please provide your views below:

11 Consultation Question 4:

No

Please provide your views below:

Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open. The UN Special Rapporteur recommends that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth.

The child's best interests are the most important factor.

12 Consultation Question 5: We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the Family Procedure Rules 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise. Do consultees agree?

Yes

13 Consultation Question 6:

Please provide your views below:

Chapter 8: Legal Parenthood: Proposals for Reform - A New Pathway

14 Consultation Question 7:

No

Please provide your views below:

This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteurs key recommendations and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements in both an international and domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the intended parents legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measure that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised. The child's best interests are the most important interests.

16 Consultation Question 9: We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I completely disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

I disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object.
This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the most important.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland, so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The six weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a caesarian to these changes is added all the stresses of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time, not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.

21 Consultation Question 14:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.
The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage. The inevitable disruption to your life caused by pregnancy prepares you for caring for your child.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

22 Consultation Question 15:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'
There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal. However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

Yes

Please share your views below:

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

23 Consultation Question 16:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

24 Consultation Question 17: We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.Do consultees agree?

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

The intended parents have no biological connection to the child - the child is the most important person in all of this.

25 Consultation Question 18: For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

26 Consultation Question 19:

No

Please provide your views below:

How can this possibly make any sense? The intended parents are not the child's parents. This is just nonsense. For whose benefit is this? Definitely not the child's.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

Please provide your views below:

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

28 Consultation Question 21: We invite consultees' views as to: (1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and (2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.

29 Consultation Question 22:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.

30 Consultation Question 23:

Please provide your views below:

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

32 Consultation Question 25: We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Please provide your views below:

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

33 Consultation Question 26:

No

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

34 Consultation Question 27:

No

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. 42 Consultation Question 35: We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

43 Consultation Question 36: We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

Please provide your views below:

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

44 Consultation Question 37: We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

45 Consultation Question 37: We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

46 Consultation Question 38: We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

Please provide your views below:

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

47 Consultation Question 39: We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood. Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

49 Consultation Question 41: We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

50 Consultation Question 42: We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest. This already happens in the US with college students selling their eggs. This is completely wrong.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Chapter 10: Children's Access to Information About Surrogacy Arrangements

51 Consultation Question 43: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18. Do consultees agree?

52 Consultation Question 44: We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement. Do consultees agree?

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

53 Consultation Question 45: We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

Please provide your views below:

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

54 Consultation Question 46: We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.Do consultees agree?

55 Consultation Question 47:

Yes

Other

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

56 Consultation Question 48: We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

Please provide your views below:

Chapter 11: Eligibility Criteria for a Parental Order

62 Consultation Question 54: We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished. Do consultees agree?

68 Consultation Question 60: We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order. Do consultees agree?

No

Please provide your views below:

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

69 Consultation Question 61: We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order. Yes

Please provide your views below:

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

72 Consultation Question 64:

No

Please provide your views below:

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.
Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.
Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

Please provide your views below:

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood.

I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.
At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

I have a daughter who was 18 she is still vulnerable to adults asking her to do things and feeling she can't decline as it would be rude. Someone of her age could be manipulated very easily.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the ‘new pathway’.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple ‘surrogate’ pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women’s reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

87 Consultation Question 79:

Please provide your views below:

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Please provide your views below:

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur’s key recommendations and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. 115 Consultation Question 107:

Please provide your views below:

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.
Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long- term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself.

There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

116 Consultation Question 108: We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

Please provide your views below:

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

126 Consultation Question 118: We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this Consultation Paper.

Please provide your views below:

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.

- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

-The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

(1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

(2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

(1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and

(2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

(1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;

(2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or

(3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

(1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,

(2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and

(3) met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

1.12 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;

(2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and

(3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

(1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;

(2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and

(3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;

(2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and

(3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

(1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;

(2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and

(3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.17 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

(1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and

(2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.19 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Paragraph 8.77

Consultation Question 17.

1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

1.21 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

1.22 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

1.23 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

(1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:

(a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and

(b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or

(2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

1.24 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

(1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;

(2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and

(3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.25 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and

(2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.26 We invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and

(2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:

(a) administrative, or

(b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.27 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and

(2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.28 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and

(2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.29 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

(1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and

(2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.31 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and

(2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify a measure that contravenes recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.32 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the 'intended parents' should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women's reproductive capacities.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.33 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

(2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.140

Consultation Question 30.

1.34 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

1.35 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

N/A

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.36 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.37 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.38 We provisionally propose that:

(1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.39 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

(1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;

(2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;

(3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;

(4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and

(5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

LEAVE ALL CHECK BOXES BLANK (i.e. none of the above)

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.40 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.42 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.44 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.45 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.46 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.47 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

1.48 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

1.49 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

1.50 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

1.51 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.52 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.53 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.54 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.55 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.56 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.57 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;

(2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:

(a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and

(b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and

(3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

1.59 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.60 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

(1) where his or her legal parents have consented;

(2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or

(3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

1.62 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.63 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.64 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

(1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or

(2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.65 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.66 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.67 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

(2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

(a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or

(b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and

(3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.68 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.69 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.70 We invite consultees' views on whether:

(1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or

(2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

1.71 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

1.72 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

(1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but

(2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.73 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

1.74 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 12.64

Consultation Question 60.

1.75 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.76 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.77 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

(1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or

(2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.79 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.80 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

(1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or

(2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.81 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.82 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.83 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood.

I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.84 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.85 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.86 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.87 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.88 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

(1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and

(2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.90 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.91 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

(1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;

(2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and

(3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.92 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.94 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

(1) based on an allowance;

(2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or

(3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and

(2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.29

Consultation Question 76.

1.99 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

(1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or

(2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.101 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

(1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and

(2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

(1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;

(2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or

(3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.103 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

(1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or

(2) left to the parties to negotiate.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.105 We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and

(2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

(1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or

(2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

(1) no other payments;

(2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;

(3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;

(4) lost earnings;

(5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or

(6) gifts.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.110 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

(1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;

(2) to any miscarriage or termination; or

(3) some other period of time (please specify).

Paragraph 15.72

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.115 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

(1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and

(2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

1.120 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of their experience of applying to register a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement as a British citizen and obtaining a passport for the child. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have about causes of delays in the process.

Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.53

Consultation Question 93.

1.122 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.68

Consultation Question 94.

1.123 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport before the child is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

1.124 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.125 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or

(2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.126 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.127 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

1.128 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.129 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.130 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.131 We provisionally propose that:

1.132 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.133 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.134 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.135 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.137 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and

(2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself.

There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.144 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.145 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.146 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

(1) when the child was born;

(2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;

(3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and

(4) whether they are a:

(a) opposite-sex couple;

(b) male same-sex couple;

(c) female same-sex couple;

(d) single woman; or

(e) single man.

Paragraph 18.2

Consultation Question 110.

1.147 We invite consultees who have experience of applying for a parental order in the UK to tell us:

(1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;

(2) whether they had legal advice before the making of the parental order;

(3) whether they were represented by a lawyer in court; and

(4) the cost of any legal advice or representation.

Paragraph 18.4

Consultation Question 111.

1.148 We invite consultees' views as to the impact (social, emotional, financial or otherwise) of the current law where the intended parents are not the legal parents from birth of the child born of the surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 18.6

Consultation Question 112.

1.149 We invite consultees to tell us what they have paid for, or to provide evidence about the cost of:

(1) medical screening; and

(2) implications counselling

(where possible separating out the cost of such screening, tests or implications counselling from any other costs involved with fertility treatment).

N/A

1.150 We invite legal consultees, who advise on surrogacy and parental order proceedings, to provide evidence of what they would charge:

(1) to provide advice sufficient to meet the proposed requirement for independent legal advice discussed in Chapter 13; and

(2) to draft, advise on and negotiate the written surrogacy agreement required for the new pathway.

N/A

Paragraph 18.8

Consultation Question 113.

1.151 We invite consultees to tell us of the impact of:

(1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and

(2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:

(a) in the new pathway;

(b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or

(c) in both situations.

Paragraph 18.11

Consultation Question 114.

1.152 We invite consultees who consider that they might be able to fulfil the role of the independent professional discussed in Chapter 9 to tell us:

(1) their profession; and

(2) what they would charge to provide such a service.

Paragraph 18.13

Consultation Question 115.

1.153 We invite consultees who are intended parents to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

(1) if particular proposals will increase accessibility, and why; and

(2) if particular proposals will restrict accessibility, and why.

N/A

1.154 We invite consultees who are surrogates to give us their views on the impact of our proposals for reform on their ability to enter into surrogacy arrangements and, in particular:

Paragraph 18.15

Consultation Question 116.

1.155 We ask consultees who are intended parents to tell us:

(1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;

(2) what they spent, in total, on the surrogacy arrangement(s) that led to the birth of their child(ren), including the cost of fertility treatment, payments to the surrogate and payments to any surrogacy agency or organisation;

(3) how they raised the funds for the surrogacy arrangement(s);

(4) what they spent on any fertility treatment prior to entering into a surrogacy arrangement (where that treatment did not lead to the birth of a child); and

(5) how they raised the funds for the fertility treatment.

Paragraph 18.18

Consultation Question 117.

1.156 We invite consultees' views as to the specific impact of our proposals in Northern Ireland.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.157 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.

8 Consultation Question 1:

Yes

Please provide your views below:

All international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a Judge of the High Court. There is a history of international surrogacy abuse and exploitation of birth mothers, as well as numerous high-profile cases where children have been treated appallingly / refused, and a high level of scrutiny should be maintained.

14 Consultation Question 7:

No

Please provide your views below:

The intended parents should not be documented as the legal parents at birth. This would reduce the birth mother to a vessel, such knowledge of which would be detrimental to the mental health of the child, and against the healthy formation of their identity. This proposal weakens the surrogate's right to change her mind.

16 Consultation Question 9: We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.Do consultees agree?

Yes

Please provide your views below:

The prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements, otherwise the right of the child to discover their genetic identity is limited, which has a profound psychological impact. There is also a risk that closely related persons may become romantically and sexually involved due to lack of awareness about their relatedness.

17 Consultation Question 10: We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

Please provide your views below:

The surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal status by the intended parents immediately after the birth and before the baby is handed over, and she should not be pressured. There should be no automatic right to a baby for anyone other than its birth mother, to whom it is bonded immediately after conception. This consultation takes no account of the natural, hormonal and genetic link between birth mother and baby and assumes an immediate hand-over, whether the birth mother objects or not. The birth mother should have the right to change her mind.

Please provide your views below:

The surrogacy business should be banned, not made easier. There is no evidence in the proposed changes that there is any benefit to the surrogacy business, which benefits agencies, lawyers and those commissioning a surrogate (who is expected to carry a child as an altruistic act), being made easier for those who profit. It is not ethical to turn a profit on the exploitation of women and their children. The evidence points to banning or severely restricting surrogacy practices as has been done in European countries such as Switzerland, France, Germany and Sweden and further afield in India and Thailand (where birth mothers have been exploited due to their financial desperation, leaving them devastated).

38 Consultation Question 31: We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

Please provide your views below:

The views of independent surrogates are unlikely to be well represented, particularly overseas surrogates, mainly poor and uneducated and often exploited.

39 Consultation Question 32:

Please provide your views below:

The prime concern of the consultation is the 'commissioners', so they can have ease of access to buying a baby, not the well being of the woman surrogate. The vast majority of woman surrogates come from poorer circumstances than the 'commissioners' and yet the law wants to describe that as 'altruistic' rather that what it actually is - commercial surrogacy which is not legal.

Please provide your views below:

Children born of surrogacy arrangement, where there is or is not a genetic connection to the birth mother, should have access to all facts relating to their birth heritage and origins - a practice adoption agencies now recognize as key elements for children's rights, security and healthy maturity. Otherwise human life is reduced to a commodity for those with means to purchase.

Question No.	Consultation Question
Q1	Consultation Question 7. In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have: (1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth, (2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and (3) met eligibility requirements, on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q1	Yes
Q2	Consultation Question 11. We provisionally propose that:

	(1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child; (2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and (3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q2	No. There should be agreements in place in advance of the birth. Once the baby is born, provided the genetic links are to the intended parents the surrogate should not have rights to retain the child/ children.
Q3	Consultation Question 12. We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that: (1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child; (2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and (3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q3	No. The surrogate should not be able to object, unless she has a genetic link. Then the above should apply.
Q4	Consultation Question 15. We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.
Your Response to Q4	The surrogate should not have rights to retain the child, unless she has a genetic link. If the above is legalised, then yes any parent with a genetic link should automatically have rights to the child.
Q5	Consultation Question 27.

	We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway: (1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and (2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q5	yes
Q6	Consultation Question 28. We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q6	No.
Q7	Consultation Question 29. For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and (2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.
Your Response to Q7	There may be opportunity to develop this area. The proposition is grey and needs further refining. Inherently yes, there should be restrictions to the surrogate if no genetic link
Q8	Consultation Question 55. We provisionally propose that: (1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available; (2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

	(a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or (b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and (3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q8	Yes
Q9	Consultation Question 30. We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q9	yes
Q10	Consultation Question 32. We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway. We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.
Your Response to Q10	Yes. Whether independent or through an organisation, the law should apply to all surrogacy arrangements within the UK
Q11	Consultation Question 67. We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway: (1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and (2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15. Do consultees agree?

Your Response to Q11	Yes. But counselling should focus on balance of relationships between both parties and agreement to ethical questions regarding health, abortions etc.
Q12	Consultation Question 68. We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q12	It should be a recommendation, not a requirement. There is limited specialists regarding surrogacy and as a result those solicitors charge a premium which is obscenely high and unnecessary.
Q13	Consultation Question 88. We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q13	Yes to both
Q14	Consultation Question 42. We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q14	Yes
Q15	Consultation Question 62. We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity: (1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or (2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made. We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

Your Response to Q15	The need for surrogacy should be confirmed by their GP/ specialist be it for mental wellbeing or inability to conceive or risk of life during pregnancy. As is required for international surrogacy for many countries.
Q16	Consultation Question 70. We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.
Your Response to Q16	Yes, except exceptional circumstances where additional counselling is requried
Q17	Consultation Question 33. We provisionally propose that: (1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations; (2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and (3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q17	yes
Q18	Consultation Question 35. We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q18	No.
Q19	Consultation Question 37. We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.
Your Response to Q19	Yes. Matching should be regulated to ensure there are correct requirements in place. This should minimise risk of matching for speed rather than the correct partnership which is key in altruistic surrogacy.
Q20	Consultation Question 59.

	We provisionally propose that the new pathway – (1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but (2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements. We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q20	There should be a genetic link in both international and local surrogacy. Internationally it is required to minimise risk of child abduction etc. This should be no different in the uk. I do not agree and there should be a link to either parent.
Q21	Consultation Question 46. We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q21	Yes
Q22	Consultation Question 47. We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that: (1) the register should be maintained by the Authority; (2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include: (a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and

	(b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and (3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q22	Yes.
Q23	Consultation Question 48. We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.
Your Response to Q23	It depends on the information suggested
Q24	Consultation Question 49. We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances: (1) where his or her legal parents have consented; (2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or (3) in any other circumstances.
Your Response to Q24	I agree to all of the above.
Q25	Consultation Question 51. We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so. Do consultees agree?

	We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.
Your Response to Q25	Yes. But this should be regulated to only being able to access the information for health purposes and to minimise the risk of incest. No to those with no genetic link.
Q26	Consultation Question 52. We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so: (1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or (2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.
Your Response to Q26	Yes if there is a genetic link
Q27	Consultation Question 53. For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.
Your Response to Q27	No. this should not be accessible
Q28	Consultation Question 72. We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be: (1) based on an allowance; (2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or (3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.
Your Response to Q28	All of the above. And should be agreed in advance with both parties as to preferred route.
Q29	Consultation Question 73. We invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and

	(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".
Your Response to Q29	Yes
Q30	Consultation Question 74. We invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and (2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.
Your Response to Q30	Yes this should be possible. Some costs sre not necessarily receiptable. There should be flexibility in the law for this.
Q31	Consultation Question 75. We invite consultees' views as to: (1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and (2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.
Your Response to Q31	Yes although this is a big unknow and isn't ideal for the intended parent, the surrogate is doing an amazing thing and should not be left out of pocket. However any unique costs should be adequately justifiable and there be evidence.
Q32	Consultation Question 76. We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).
Your Response to Q32	There should be a cap in place but yes.
Q33	Consultation Question 77. We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings: (1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or (2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).
Your Response to Q33	Yes but again should be quantifiable and a cap potentially agreed.

Q34	Consultation Question 78. We invite consultees to share their experiences: (1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and (2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.
Your Response to Q34	I have not been in this position so cannot comment
Q35	Consultation Question 79. We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following: (1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth; (2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or (3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy. We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation. We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be: (1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or (2) left to the parties to negotiate.
Your Response to Q35	Left to the parties to negotiate but perhaps guidelines provided on a recommended fixed fee.
Q36	Consultation Question 80. We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.
Your Response to Q36	No. they should not pay compensation. The surrogate is agreeing to this willingly and this is a risk.
Q37	Consultation Question 81.

	We invite consultees' views as to whether: (1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and (2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.
Your Response to Q37	Yes gifts should be acceptable and there should not be restrictions. It should be up to the intended parents discretion
Q38	Consultation Question 82. We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be: (1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or (2) a fixed fee set by the regulator. We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee: (1) no other payments; (2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy; (3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy; (4) lost earnings; (5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or (6) gifts.
Your Response to Q38	A fixed fee may be a good option, but again perhaps consider a recommendation. If it is a fixed fee only gifts should be an addition.
Q39	Consultation Question 84. We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q39	yes

Q40	Consultation Question 85. We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.
Your Response to Q40	No comment
Q41	Consultation Question 92. We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q41	yes
Q42	Consultation Question 94. We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules. Do consultees agree? We provisionally propose that: (1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or (2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate. Do consultees agree? We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.
Your Response to Q42	Yes I agree to all the above

Q43	Consultation Question 95. We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q43	yes
Q44	Consultation Question 97. We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q44	Yes. What exists is awful and unclear
Q45	Consultation Question 99. We provisionally propose that: the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law. Do consultees agree?
Your Response to Q45	yes
Q46	Consultation Question 107. We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area. We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

	We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.
Your Response to Q46	There is currently zero support from the British health service for those undergoing surrogacy, especially abroad. There should be support for anyone who is due to be a parent.

Consultation Question 1.

1.1 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in England and Wales:

(1) all international surrogacy arrangements should continue to be automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court; and

YES

International surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale, abuse and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should continue to be heard by a judge of the High Court.

(2) if international surrogacy arrangements are not automatically allocated to a judge of the High Court, circuit judges should be ticketed to hear such cases.

Paragraph 6.42

Consultation Question 2.

1.2 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in respect of England and Wales

(1) domestic surrogacy cases which continue to require a post-birth parental order should continue to be heard by lay justices, or whether they should be allocated to another level of the judiciary; and

(2) If consultees consider that such cases should be allocated to another level of the judiciary, which level of the judiciary would be appropriate.

All surrogacy arrangements pose opportunities for the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of birth mothers. These are human rights issues of the utmost seriousness and so the arrangements should be overseen by a senior and experienced judge. For this reason these cases should NOT be heard by a lay judge but rather by a senior judge, e.g. ticketed to circuit judges or higher.

Paragraph 6.51

Consultation Question 3.

1.3 We invite consultees to provide any evidence that would support either the retention of the current allocation rules, or their reform along the lines that we discuss in Consultation Questions 1 and 2.

Paragraph 6.53

Consultation Question 4.

1.4 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, the court should be placed under a duty to consider whether to make an order awarding the intended parents parental responsibility at the first directions hearing in the proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

(Note that this provisional proposal would be necessary only if our provisional proposal in Chapter 8 that all intended parents (whether in the new pathway or not) automatically acquire parental responsibility if the child is living with or being cared for by them is not supported by consultees).

NO

The UN Special Rapporteur recommends* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. Nothing about the transfer of parental responsibility should be automatic and all options should be open.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 6.58

Consultation Question 5.

1.5 We provisionally propose that the rule currently contained in rule 16.35(5) of the FPR 2010 should be reversed, so that a parental order report is released to the parties in the proceedings by default, unless the court directs otherwise.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 6.72

Consultation Question 6.

1.6 We invite consultees' views as to whether they are of the view that, in Scotland:

(1) there is a need for greater consistency and clarity in provisions relating to the expenses of curators ad litem and reporting officers and, if so, how this should be addressed;

(2) it should be provided by statute that, at the initial hearing or any subsequent hearing for a parental order, the court may make any such interim order or orders for parental responsibilities and parental rights as it sees fit; and/or

(3) further procedural reform is needed and, if so, what that reform should be.

Paragraph 6.110

Consultation Question 7.

1.7 In respect of a domestic surrogacy arrangement, we provisionally propose that, before the child is conceived, where the intended parents and surrogate have:

(1) entered into an agreement including the prescribed information, which will include a statement as to legal parenthood on birth,

(2) complied with procedural safeguards for the agreement, and

(3) met eligibility requirements,

on the birth of the child the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child, subject to the surrogate's right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I vehemently disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. These require the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be freely given AFTER the child's birth. I believe that this important safeguard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers should apply equally to surrogacy arrangements, in both an international and a domestic context.

This proposal would set a very dangerous precedent for all women, all mothers, all children and all of the implications need to be fully understood. There is no evidence in the consultation paper that the law commissioners have considered these more general implications fully, if at all.

I understand that the proposal to automatically grant the 'intended parents' legal parenthood at birth is based on (or justified by) in part at least the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. I do not agree that these claimed wishes alone justify measures that contravene the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and to protect birth mothers.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to encourage or condone a system that would require women to deliberately conceive and subsequently give birth with the expectation that they would have little or no legal responsibility for the child. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some 'surrogate' mothers say they want or not.

Paragraph 8.13

Consultation Question 8.

1.8 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations and licensed clinics should be under a duty to keep a record of surrogacy arrangements under the new pathway to which they are a party, with such records being retained for a specified minimum period.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations.

1.9 We invite consultees' views as to what the length of that period should be: whether 100 years or another period.

Paragraph 8.14

Consultation Question 9.

1.10 We provisionally propose that the prohibition on the use of anonymously donated gametes should apply to traditional surrogacy arrangements with which a regulated surrogacy organisation is involved.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations, because they would inevitably lead to a normalising of surrogacy and an increase in its prevalence.

Paragraph 8.21

Consultation Question 10.

1.11 We invite consultees' views as to whether the use of anonymously donated sperm in a traditional, domestic surrogacy arrangement should prevent that arrangement from entering into the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway.'

Paragraph 8.22

Consultation Question 11.

1.12 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the surrogate should have the right to object to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents, for a fixed period after the birth of the child;

(2) this right to object should operate by the surrogate making her objection in writing within a defined period, with the objection being sent to both the intended parents and the body responsible for the regulation of surrogacy; and

(3) the defined period should be the applicable period for birth registration less one week.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposal that the 'intended parents' should automatically acquire legal parenthood at birth and that the birth mother has only a limited time to object. This contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations,* including that the birth mother is the legal parent at birth and that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements are taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth, with the child's best interests being the paramount consideration.

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia.

After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

Paragraph 8.35

Consultation Question 12.

1.13 We provisionally propose that, where the surrogate objects to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood within the period fixed after birth, the surrogacy arrangement should no longer be able to proceed in the new pathway, with the result that:

(1) the surrogate will be the legal parent of the child;

(2) if one of the intended parents would, under the current law, be a legal parent of the child, then he or she will continue to be a legal parent in these circumstances; and

(3) the intended parents would be able to make an application for a parental order to obtain legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly with the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects.

The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth, along with her husband, spouse or civil partner if she has one – and decisions about any subsequent change of legal parenthood and parental responsibility must be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and with the child's best interest being the paramount consideration, in accordance with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations.*

The birth registration period is only 6 weeks and is shorter in Scotland – so the proposal is to give the birth mother less than 5 weeks to object. The 6 weeks after childbirth are recognised as the most rapid period of physical, physiological and emotional change that takes place in healthy human life. In a normal delivery there might have been significant blood loss leading to anaemia. After a Caesarean, to these changes is added all the stress of recovering from major abdominal surgery. It is totally inappropriate to expect the birth mother to make a calm and considered decision of such huge and life-changing significance at such a time – not to mention following through with the practical requirements of putting it in writing and ensuring it is received before the expiry of the deadline.

Paragraph 8.36

Consultation Question 13.

1.14 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should be required to make a declaration on registering the birth of the child that they have no reason to believe that the surrogate has lacked capacity at any time during the period in which she had the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood;

(2) if the intended parents cannot provide this declaration then, during the period in which she has the right to object to the intended parents acquiring legal parenthood, the surrogate should be able to provide a positive consent to such acquisition; and

(3) if the intended parents are unable to make this declaration and the surrogate is unable to provide the positive consent within the relevant period, the surrogacy arrangement should exit the new pathway and the intended parents should be able to make an application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 8.37

Consultation Question 14.

1.15 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, the welfare of the child to be born as a result of the surrogacy arrangement:

(1) should be assessed in the way set out in Chapter 8 of the current Code of Practice;

(2) either the regulated surrogacy organisation or regulated clinic, as appropriate, should be responsible for ensuring that this procedure is followed; and

(3) there should be no requirement for any welfare assessment of the child after his or her birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. It contradicts the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth and that the child's best interests are the paramount consideration. A welfare assessment is an absolute requirement if an informed decision is to be made about the child's best interest. Therefore a welfare assessment MUST be made after the child's birth.

The pre-conception assessment would typically have been carried out more than a year before the birth of the child. Much can change in that time.

The justification that a welfare assessment after the birth of the child is not necessary because parents of children born through the normal process are not subject to such checks does not hold. Pregnancy, birth and the post-partum changes are intense physical and existential experiences that change you and prime you to love and be sensitive to the new-born child and rise to the challenge of the enormous task of raising him or her to adulthood. For obvious reasons 'intended parents' do not have this advantage.

In addition, pregnancy and childbirth are a huge investment of the birth mother's physical, physiological and emotional resources, which means she has already made a huge and unquantifiable, nearly year-long, commitment to the child. This means her practical and emotional commitment to the child is already well-developed, giving her the best chance of surmounting all the difficulties that will inevitably arise over the course of the child's childhood and adolescence.

The 'intended parents' have had no similar experience. The investment of financial resources does not in any way prepare you for the practical reality of caring for a new-born child and the long road of nurturing and shepherding him or her to adulthood.

Paragraph 8.51

Consultation Question 15.

1.16 We provisionally propose that, for a child born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement under the new pathway, where the surrogate has exercised her right to object to the intended parents' acquisition of legal parenthood at birth, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner, if any, should not be a legal parent of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'new pathway.'

There is a very real risk that spouses and partners will coerce women into being a 'surrogate' for financial gain. This risk is likely to increase if he or she does not have legal parenthood or parental responsibility for any children born of the arrangement. This is enough reason to reject this proposal.

However, it also represents a significant change in legal parenthood rules and would therefore have an implication for all children, all families because it would set a precedent. It should not be introduced without a full assessment of all the implications, including on the rights of mothers and children. There is no evidence that the law commissioners have carried out any such assessment.

1.17 We invite consultees' views as to whether, in the case of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the surrogate's spouse or civil partner should continue to be a legal parent of the child born as a result of the arrangement.

YES

The normal legal parenthood rules should apply. This will reduce the risk of spouses and partners coercing women into surrogacy for financial gain.

Paragraph 8.57

Consultation Question 16.

1.18 We provisionally propose that, in the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn:

(1) the intended parents should be the legal parents of the child unless the surrogate exercises her right to object; and

(2) the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period of the right to object.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' – particularly the 'intended parents' acquiring legal parenthood automatically at birth unless the birth mother objects. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn.

1.19 We provisionally propose that, outside the new pathway, where a child born of a surrogacy arrangement is stillborn, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the stillbirth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the birth parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and this should not change if the child is stillborn and the registration should accurately reflect this.

Paragraph 8.77

Consultation Question 17.

1.20 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where the child dies before the making of the parental order, the surrogate should be able to consent to the intended parents being registered as the parents before the expiry of the period allowed for the registration of the birth, provided that the intended parents have made a declaration to the effect that the relevant criteria for the making of a parental order are satisfied, on registration of the birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and if the child dies before the parental order, the registration of birth should accurately reflect that the birth mother was the legal parent.

Paragraph 8.79

Consultation Question 18.

1.21 For surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether, where the surrogate dies in childbirth or before the end of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, the arrangement should not proceed in the new pathway and the intended parents should be required to make an application for a parental order.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 8.80

Consultation Question 19.

1.22 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy, the intended parents should be registered as the child's parents on birth, subject to the surrogate not exercising her right to object within the defined period.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with the deceased 'intended parents' being registered as the legal parents in this situation. The birth mother should always be the legal parent of the child at birth and the registration of birth should accurately reflect this.

1.23 We invite consultees' views as to whether, for surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, where both intended parents die during the surrogate's pregnancy or before a parental order is made:

(1) it should be competent for an application to be made, by a person who claims an interest under section 11(3)(a) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, or who would be permitted to apply for an order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989:

(a) for an order for appointment as guardian of the child, and

(b) for a parental order in the name of the intended parents, subject to the surrogate's consent; or

(2) the surrogate should be registered as the child's mother and it should not be possible for the intended parents to be registered as the child's parents, but that there should be a procedure for the surrogate to provide details of the intended parents, and, if relevant, gamete donors, for entry onto the register of surrogacy arrangements.

The intended parents should NOT be registered as the child's parents if they are already deceased – so option (2) is preferable.

Paragraph 8.81

Consultation Question 20.

1.24 We provisionally propose that, where an application is made for a parental order by a sole applicant under section 54A:

(1) the applicant should have to make a declaration that it was always intended that there would only be a single applicant for a parental order in respect of the child concerned or to supply the name and contact details of the other intended parent;

(2) if details of another intended parent are supplied, a provision should be made for notice to be given to the potential second intended parent of the application and an opportunity given to that party to provide notice of opposition within a brief period (of, say, 14 to 21 days); and

(3) if the second intended parent gives notice of his or her intention to oppose, he or she should be required to make his or her own application within a brief period (say 14 days), otherwise the application of the first intended parent will be determined by the court.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 8.86

Consultation Question 21.

1.25 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) a temporary three-parent model of legal parenthood in surrogacy cases; and

(2) how the legal parenthood of the surrogate should be extinguished in this model.

I profoundly oppose a three-parent model of legal parenthood, even if it is temporary. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.91

Consultation Question 22.

1.26 We invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether there should be any additional oversight in the new pathway that we have proposed, leading to the acquisition of legal parenthood by the intended parents at birth; and

(2) if so, as to whether should this oversight be:

(a) administrative, or

(b) judicial.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should be the legal parent and have parental responsibility at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child based on the best interests of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.93

Consultation Question 23.

1.27 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether the welfare checklist, contained in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989, should be amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering the arrangements for a child in the context of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement; and

(2) if so, as to what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions about the child in the event of a dispute about a surrogacy arrangement. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and conforms to the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.120

Consultation Question 24.

1.28 In respect of England and Wales, we invite consultees' views:

(1) as to whether the checklist, contained in section 1(4) of the ACA 2002 (as applied and modified by regulation 2 and paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 of the 2018 Regulations) should be further amended to provide for the court to have regard to additional specific factors in the situation where it is considering whether to make a parental order; and

(2) what those additional factors should be.

The child's best interests should drive all decisions when considering whether to make a parental order. The welfare checklist provides a comprehensive summary of the issues to be considered and is adequate as it is, and it conforms to UN Special Rapporteur's recommendation* that the child's best interest is the paramount consideration. I therefore do not believe any other factors should be added.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.121

Consultation Question 25.

1.29 We invite consultees' view as to whether section 10 of the Children Act 1989 should be amended to add the intended parents to the category of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

NO

There are real risks of the sale and trafficking of children and of exploitation of the birth mother and her reproductive capacities in all surrogacy arrangements. The court should therefore always have oversight of the arrangements. I am also concerned that there should be no liberalisation of the law on surrogacy because of the potential human rights abuses involved. I do not believe that 'intended parents' should be added to the list of those who can apply for a section 8 order without leave.

Paragraph 8.123

Consultation Question 26.

1.30 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement outside the new pathway, the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility automatically where:

(1) the child is living with them or being cared for by them; and

(2) they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with this proposal. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, as recommended by the UN Special Rapporteur* in order to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

I understand that the decision to automatically grant the 'intended parents' parental responsibility is based on (or justified by) the wishes expressed by some 'surrogate' mothers prior to the consultation. Their wishes alone do not justify measures that contravene recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur and the provisions of the Hague Convention that are designed to reduce the risk of the sale and trafficking of children.

Bringing a child into the world is a great responsibility and it is not ethical to condone a system that would require women to give birth with the expectation that they would have no legal responsibility for that child – other than a temporary right to 'object'. The rights of the child must be prioritised regardless whether that is what some birth mothers say they wish.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.132

Consultation Question 27.

1.31 We provisionally propose that, where a child is born as a result of a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway:

(1) the intended parents should acquire parental responsibility on the birth of the child; and

(2) if the surrogate exercises her right to object, the intended parents should continue to have parental responsibility for the child where the child is living with, or being cared for by, them, and they intend to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should acquire parentage or parental responsibility automatically. The birth mother should be the legal parent at birth and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.134

Consultation Question 28.

1.32 We provisionally propose that, for surrogacy arrangements within the new pathway, the surrogate should retain parental responsibility for the child born as a result of the arrangement until the expiry of the period during which she can exercise her right to object, assuming that she does not exercise her right to object.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree that the birth mother should have parental responsibility for the child but NOT that the 'intended parents' should get automatic legal parenthood and parental responsibility.

All decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility in surrogacy arrangements should be taken by a court or other competent authority AFTER the birth of the child, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their women's reproductive capacities.

* https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Children/Pages/Surrogacy.aspx

Paragraph 8.139

Consultation Question 29.

1.33 For all surrogacy arrangements, we invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for any restriction to be placed on the exercise of parental responsibility by either the surrogate (or other legal parent), or the intended parents, during the period in which parental responsibility is shared; and

(2) whether it should operate to restrict the exercise of parental responsibility by the party not caring for the child or with whom the child is not living.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The birth mother should have legal parenthood and parental responsibility at and after the birth and all subsequent decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

Paragraph 8.140

Consultation Question 30.

1.34 We provisionally propose that traditional surrogacy arrangements should fall within the scope of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 9.29

Consultation Question 31.

1.35 We invite the views of independent surrogates, and intended parents who have used independent surrogacy arrangements, to tell us about their experience. In particular, we would be interested to hear about any health screening, counselling and legal advice that took place.

N/A

Paragraph 9.35

Consultation Question 32.

1.36 We invite consultees' views as to whether independent surrogacy arrangements should be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

1.37 We invite consultees' views as to how independent surrogacy arrangements might be brought within the scope of the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. It is inappropriate and contradicts binding obligations under the UNCRC and its first optional protocol.

Paragraph 9.36

Consultation Question 33.

1.38 We provisionally propose that:

(1) there should be regulated surrogacy organisations;

NO

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(2) there should be no requirement for a regulated surrogacy organisation to take a particular form; and

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

(3) each surrogacy organisation should be required to appoint an individual responsible for ensuring that the organisation complies with regulation.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.61

Consultation Question 34.

1.39 We provisionally propose that the person responsible must be responsible for:

(1) representing the organisation to, and liaising with, the regulator;

(2) managing the regulated surrogacy organisation with sufficient care, competence and skill;

(3) ensuring the compliance of the organisation with relevant law and regulation, including the creation, maintenance and operation of necessary policies and procedures;

(4) training any staff, including that of the person responsible; and

(5) providing data to the regulator and to such other person as required by law.

Do consultees agree?

LEAVE ALL CHECK BOXES BLANK (i.e. none of the above)

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.40 We invite consultees to identify any other responsibilities which a responsible individual should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.41 We invite consultees' views as to what experience, skills and qualifications a person responsible for a surrogacy organisation should have.

I disagree with this proposal because regulated surrogacy organisations would sanction and legitimise surrogacy and inevitably lead to an increase in its prevalence. I consider surrogacy to be a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.62

Consultation Question 35.

1.42 We provisionally propose that regulated surrogacy organisations should be non-profit making bodies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy. Even if surrogacy organisations are non-profit making, they will inevitably be driven by commercial imperatives (for example, to cover costs, salaries, etc.) and will need to continuously seek new business and to convince or coerce more women to act as 'surrogates.'

Deriving income from surrogacy is abhorrent and, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution, is a potential violation of Article 6 of CEDAW, which prohibits third-parties profiting or otherwise benefiting from the prostitution of women.

Paragraph 9.84

Consultation Question 36.

1.43 We invite consultees' views as to what should be included in the definition of matching and facilitation services.

I disagree with organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.94

Consultation Question 37.

1.44 We provisionally propose that only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

1.45 We invite consultees' views as to whether only regulated surrogacy organisations should be able to offer matching and facilitation services in respect of surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I disagree with regulated surrogacy organisations or any other organisations being able to provide matching and facilitation services for any type of surrogacy, because that would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 9.95

Consultation Question 38.

1.46 We invite consultees' views as to the sanctions that should be available against organisations that offer matching and facilitation services without being regulated to do so, and whether these should be criminal, civil or regulatory.

I do not accept that matching and facilitation services should be allowed – regardless who they are provided by – because they would inevitably lead to an increase in surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children. Offering such services should be a criminal offence.

Paragraph 9.97

Consultation Question 39.

1.47 We provisionally propose that the remit of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority be expanded to include the regulation of regulated surrogacy organisations, and oversight of compliance with the proposed legal requirements for the new pathway to legal parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I disagree with the proposal for regulated surrogacy organisations because they would sanction surrogacy, which I consider a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and would drive an increase in surrogacy.

1.48 If consultees agree, we invite their views as to how the Authority's Code of Practice should apply to regulated surrogacy organisations, including which additional or new areas of regulation should be applied.

Paragraph 9.117

Consultation Question 40.

1.49 We provisionally propose that surrogacy agreements should remain unenforceable (subject to the exception we provisionally propose in Consultation Question 88 in relation to financial terms).

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 9.129

Consultation Question 41.

1.50 We provisionally propose that there should be no prohibition against charging for negotiating, facilitating and advising on surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with this proposal and the opening up of surrogacy in this country, because I consider it a violation of the human rights of both women and the child. The idea of organisations charging to facilitate it is utterly abhorrent and violates the spirit, if not the letter, of Article 6 of CEDAW, given the parallels between surrogacy and prostitution. Article 6 prohibits the exploitation of the prostitution of women – which includes deriving any form of benefit from women's prostitution.

Paragraph 9.135

Consultation Question 42.

1.51 We provisionally propose that the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy should be removed, with the effect that there will be no restrictions on advertising anything that can lawfully be done in relation to surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I VEHEMENTLY disagree with removing the current ban on advertising in respect of surrogacy. Surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of both women and children, and enabling advertising sites (and other 'service' organisations) to financially benefit from it is abhorrent.

At this time of increasing poverty and inequality, it would be unethical to promote the idea that being a 'surrogate' mother would be a solution to an impoverished woman's financial problems. If this proposal is implemented, Facebook and Google are likely present surrogacy ads to female students and young women suggesting that becoming a 'surrogate' would provide the solution to their financial worries. The most disadvantaged young women would be the most vulnerable to this idea and it is doubtful it would ever truly be in her best interest.

Just as we protect disadvantaged people from the temptation of selling their kidneys for money, we need to protect disadvantaged women from the temptation of renting their wombs. This means that advertising of surrogacy MUST remain banned.

Paragraph 9.145

Consultation Question 43.

1.52 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, where the making of a parental order in respect of a child born of a surrogacy arrangement has been recorded in the Parental Order Register, the child should be able to access his or her original birth certificate at the age of 18.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.80

Consultation Question 44.

1.53 We provisionally propose that where children are born of surrogacy arrangements that result in the intended parents being recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of that certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. I do not agree that the 'intended parents' should be recorded as parents on the original birth certificate. The birth mother should be recorded as the birth mother on the birth certificate and all decisions involving legal parenthood and parental responsibility should be taken after the birth by a court or other competent authority, with the child's best interest the paramount consideration. This is the recommendation of the UN Special Rapporteur* and has the aim of reducing the risk of the sale and trafficking of children and the exploitation of women and their reproductive capacities.

However, if the 'intended parents' are recorded as parents on the birth certificate, the full form of the certificate should make clear that the birth was the result of a surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 10.85

Consultation Question 45.

1.54 We invite consultees' views as to whether the birth registration system in England and Wales requires reform and, if so, which reforms they would like to see.

I do not consider the birth registration system to be in need for reform. I am particularly opposed to changes to allow for the registration of three parents or for anyone other than the birth mother to be recorded as the mother on the original birth certificate. Such proposals could lead to the facilitation of the sale of children and an erosion of mothers' rights and a diluting of the understanding that the relationship between the birth mother and the child is unique.

Paragraph 10.87

Consultation Question 46.

1.55 We provisionally propose that, in England and Wales, from the age of 18, a child who has been the subject of a parental order should be able to access all the documents contained in the court's file for those parental order proceedings.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 10.89

Consultation Question 47.

1.56 We provisionally propose that a national register of surrogacy arrangements should be created to record the identity of the intended parents, the surrogate and the gamete donors.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.57 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the register should be maintained by the Authority;

(2) the register should record information for all surrogacy arrangements, whether in or outside the new pathway, provided that the information about who has contributed gametes for the conception of the child has been medically verified, and that the information should include:

(a) identifying information about all the parties to the surrogacy arrangement, and

(b) non-identifying information about those who have contributed gametes to the conception of the child; and

(3) to facilitate the record of this information, the application form/petition for a parental order should record full information about a child's genetic heritage where available and established by DNA or medical evidence, recording the use of an anonymous gamete donor if that applies.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and regulated surrogacy organisations. However, should surrogacy take place, it is important that the children have access to information about their origins and these proposals seem generally sound, except that the information held on gamete donors should also include identifying information – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.102

Consultation Question 48.

1.58 We invite consultees' views as to whether non-identifying information about the surrogate and the intended parents should be recorded in the national register of surrogacy arrangements and available for disclosure to a child born of a surrogacy arrangement.

I agree but with the proviso that all the information should be identifying – because otherwise it trivialises the creation of a child and denies the child the right to know her or his genetic parentage.

Paragraph 10.104

Consultation Question 49.

1.59 We provisionally propose that a child born of a surrogacy arrangement should be able to access the information recorded in the register from the age of 18 for identifying information, and 16 for non-identifying information (if such information is included on the register), provided that he or she has been given a suitable opportunity to receive counselling about the implications of compliance with this request.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.60 We invite consultees' views as to whether a child under the age of 18 or 16 (depending on whether the information is identifying or non-identifying respectively) should be able to access the information in the register and, if so, in which circumstances:

(1) where his or her legal parents have consented;

(2) if he or she has received counselling and the counsellor judges that he or she is sufficiently mature to receive this information; and/or

(3) in any other circumstances.

I agree with (1) and (2) and believe there might be other circumstances where this is reasonable.

Paragraph 10.110

Consultation Question 50.

1.61 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any provision for those born of a surrogacy arrangement to make a request for information to disclose whether a person whom he or she is intending to marry, or with whom he or she intends to enter into a civil partnership or intimate physical relationship, was carried by the same surrogate.

YES, this should be possible.

Paragraph 10.114

Consultation Question 51.

1.62 We provisionally propose that where two people are born to, and genetically related through, the same surrogate, they should be able to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.63 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be provision to allow people born to the same surrogate – but who are not genetically related – to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so.

YES, I agree.

Paragraph 10.121

Consultation Question 52.

1.64 We invite consultees' views as to whether provision should be made to allow a person carried by a surrogate, and the surrogate's own child, to access the register to identify each other, if they both wish to do so:

(1) if they are genetically related through the surrogate; and/or

(2) if they are not genetically related through the surrogate.

YES to both (1) and (2)

Paragraph 10.123

Consultation Question 53.

1.65 For surrogacy arrangements outside the new pathway, we invite consultees' views as to whether details of an intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

The intended parent who is not a party to the application for a parental order should be recorded in the register.

Paragraph 10.128

Consultation Question 54.

1.66 We provisionally propose that the six month time limits in sections 54 and 54A of the HFEA 2008 for making a parental order application should be abolished.

Do consultees agree?

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 11.20

Consultation Question 55.

1.67 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the current circumstances in which the consent of the surrogate (and any other legal parent) is not required, namely where a person cannot be found or is incapable of giving agreement, should continue to be available;

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

(2) the court should have the power to dispense with the consent of the surrogate, and any other legal parent of the child, in the following circumstances:

(a) where the child is living with the intended parents, with the consent of the surrogate and any other legal parent, or

(b) following a determination by the court that the child should live with the intended parents; and

(3) the court's power to dispense with consent should be subject to the paramount consideration of the child's welfare throughout his or her life guided by the factors set out in section 1 of the Adoption and Children Act 2002 and, in Scotland, in line with the section 14(3) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I disagree with this because it is a violation of women's rights and would increase the risk of child trafficking and exploitation of the rental of women's wombs. An adoption order can be considered as an option when a parental order is not possible.

Paragraph 11.58

Consultation Question 56.

1.68 We provisionally propose that, both for a parental order and in the new pathway, the intended parents or one of the intended parents must be domiciled or habitually resident in the UK, Channel Islands or Isle of Man.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The 'intended parents' should be domiciled (and not simply habitually resident) in the UK in order to avoid surrogacy tourism.

1.69 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be any additional conditions imposed on the test of habitual residence, for example, a qualifying period of habitual residence required to satisfy the test.

I profoundly disagree with opening up parental orders to 'intended parents' who are habitual residents but not domiciled in the UK – because of the risk of surrogacy tourism.

Paragraph 12.15

Consultation Question 57.

1.70 We invite consultees' views on whether:

(1) the qualifying categories of relationship in section 54(2) of the HFEA 2008 should be reformed and, if so, how; or

(2) the requirement should be removed, subject to two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of relationship being prevented from applying.

The qualifying categories of relationship should not be reformed or removed.

Paragraph 12.29

Consultation Question 58.

1.71 We provisionally propose that to use the new pathway, intended parents should be required to make a declaration in the surrogacy agreement that they intend for the child's home to be with them.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 12.34

Consultation Question 59.

1.72 We provisionally propose that the new pathway –

(1) should not impose a requirement that the intended parent, or one of the intended parents, provide gametes for the conception of the child, so that double donation of gametes is permitted, but

(2) that double donation should only be permitted in cases of medical necessity, meaning that there is not an intended parent who is able to provide a gamete due to infertility.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.73 We invite consultees' views as to whether double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway (to the same extent that it may be permitted in the new pathway) in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway' and all other proposals that are likely to result in an increase in surrogacy. I therefore do not believe that double donation should be permitted under the parental order pathway in domestic surrogacy arrangements.

1.74 We provisionally propose that the requirement that the intended parent or one of the intended parents contribute gametes to the conception of the child in the parental order pathway should be retained in international surrogacy arrangements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

Paragraph 12.64

Consultation Question 60.

1.75 We provisionally propose that if the requirement for a genetic link is retained for domestic cases outside the new pathway, the requirement should not apply, subject to medical necessity, if the court determines that the intended parents in good faith began the surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway but were required to apply for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I fundamentally disagree with proposals to introduce the 'new pathway' and believe the genetic link should be retained. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.71

Consultation Question 61.

1.76 We provisionally propose that if double donation is permitted only in cases of medical necessity, an exception should be made to allow a parental order to be granted to a single parent without a genetic link where the intended parent's former partner provides gametes but the intended parents' relationship breaks down before the grant of a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.76

Consultation Question 62.

1.77 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that a surrogacy arrangement has been used because of medical necessity:

(1) for cases under the new pathway to parenthood; and/or

(2) for cases where a post-birth parental order application is made.

I oppose surrogacy and believe that it is a fundamental violation of women's and children's rights and that it should therefore be banned. I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

1.78 We invite consultees' views as to how a test of medical necessity for surrogacy, if it is introduced, should be defined and assessed.

I dispute that surrogacy is ever a 'medical necessity.'

Paragraph 12.94

Consultation Question 63.

1.79 We provisionally propose that in order to use the new pathway to parenthood, information identifying the child's genetic parents and the surrogate must be provided for entry on the national register of surrogacy agreements prior to registration of the child's birth.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly oppose the introduction of the 'new pathway'. However, I support the requirement in any surrogacy arrangements for the recording of the identity of all genetic parents and the birth mother.

1.80 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be a condition for an application for a parental order that:

(1) those who contributed gametes are entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements; and/or

(2) if it remains a requirement that one of the intended parents provided gametes in the conception of the child, that the genetic link is demonstrated to the court with medical or DNA evidence.

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, I support this condition for a parental order in the circumstances described in both (1) and (2).

1.81 We provisionally propose that it should be a condition for the application of a parental order that the identity of the surrogate is entered on the national register of surrogacy agreements.

Do consultees agree?

YES

While I oppose surrogacy and want to see it banned, if it happens, I support this provision.

Paragraph 12.115

Consultation Question 64.

1.82 We provisionally propose that there should be no maximum age limit for the grant of a parental order. The age of the intended parents should continue to be taken into account in the assessment of the welfare of the child in applications to grant a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am opposed to surrogacy and would like to see it banned, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood.

Surrogacy is therefore particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. If surrogacy is to be opened up, a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is imperative. This will make it clear that society does not condone older people entering a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that older people will go ahead with such an arrangement and present the court with a fait accompli.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age but not beyond. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.83 We invite consultees' views as to whether under the new pathway there should be a maximum age limit for intended parents, and if so, what it should be.

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' and it should be 45.

Raising children is demanding and requires vital parents who are engaged with life and society and who can reasonably be expected to survive in good health until the child reaches adulthood. I am opposed to surrogacy per se, because it is a violation of both women's and children's human rights. However, it is particularly unethical when the 'intended parents' are old. I therefore consider that a maximum age limit for 'intended parents' is important. This will make it clear that society does not consider it acceptable for older people to enter into a surrogacy arrangement and will make it less likely that they will.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement up to that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully.

1.84 We provisionally propose that intended parents should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time that they enter into a surrogacy agreement under the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. However, if surrogacy is to be allowed, there should be a minimum age for 'intended parents' and it should be much older than 18. I suggest that 25 would be more appropriate.

Any age limits in the legislation will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning entering a surrogacy arrangement at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year olds to believe that it would be reasonable for them to become 'parents' through a surrogacy arrangement – before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

Paragraph 12.133

Consultation Question 65.

1.85 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years of age (at the time of conception), in order for the court to have the power to make a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to surrogacy per se and would like to see it banned, because I consider it a violation of both women's and children's human rights.

At 18 a woman is barely out of childhood and has not yet had an opportunity to establish herself as an adult. This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. There should be a significantly older minimum age for entering into a surrogacy arrangement and I suggest that 25 years would be more appropriate.

Any age limits will have a normative effect – and will inevitably be understood as society sanctioning surrogacy at that age. It is therefore imperative that age limits are set very carefully. What kind of society would want 18-year old girls to believe that entering a surrogacy arrangement is a reasonable thing for them to be doing before they have taken even their first steps into independence and adulthood?

1.86 We provisionally propose that surrogates should be required to be at least 18 years old at the time of entering into the surrogacy agreement within the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

This means that she is particularly vulnerable to coercion and manipulation. Paragraph 12.144

Consultation Question 66.

1.87 We provisionally propose that medical testing of the surrogate, any partner of the surrogate, and any intended parent providing gametes should be required for the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.88 We invite consultees' views as to whether the types of testing set out in the Code of Practice are feasible for traditional surrogacy arrangements outside a licensed clinic, and if not, which types of testing should be required for such arrangements.

Paragraph 13.16

Consultation Question 67.

1.89 We provisionally propose that, as a condition of being eligible for entry into the new pathway:

(1) the surrogate, her spouse, civil partner or partner (if any) and the intended parents intending to enter into a surrogacy arrangement in the new pathway should be required to attend counselling with regard to the implications of entering into that arrangement; and

(2) the implications counselling should be provided by a counsellor who meets the requirements set out in the Code of Practice at paragraphs 2.14 to 2.15.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.44

Consultation Question 68.

1.90 We provisionally propose that, for the new pathway, there should be a requirement that the surrogate and the intended parents should take independent legal advice on the effect of the law and of entering into the agreement before the agreement is signed.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.65

Consultation Question 69.

1.91 We provisionally propose that, as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway:

(1) an enhanced criminal record certificate should be obtained for intended parents, surrogates and any spouses, civil partners or partners of surrogates;

(2) the body overseeing the surrogate arrangement should not enable a surrogate arrangement to be proceed under the new pathway where a person screened is unsuitable for having being convicted of, or received a police caution for, any offence appearing on a prescribed list of offences; and

(3) the body overseeing the surrogacy arrangement may also determine that a person is unsuitable based on the information provided in the enhanced record certificate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.92 We invite consultees' views as to whether the list of offences that applies in the case of adoption is appropriate in the case of surrogacy arrangements in the new pathway.

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 13.73

Consultation Question 70.

1.93 We invite consultees' views as to whether there should be a requirement that the surrogate has previously given birth as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

OTHER

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women who have never had a child of their own entering an arrangement to undergo pregnancy and childbirth for someone else. It is impossible to understand what pregnancy and childbirth are like and how they will change you until or unless you have had that experience yourself.

Paragraph 13.95

Consultation Question 71.

1.94 We provisionally propose that there should not be a maximum number of surrogate pregnancies that a woman can undertake as an eligibility requirement of the new pathway.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I am profoundly opposed to surrogacy and the introduction of the 'new pathway'.

Society should not condone women undergoing multiple 'surrogate' pregnancies and childbirths. Even the Kennel Club recognises that female dogs should not be allowed to undertake more than four pregnancies. It is abhorrent that female dogs have better protections than women would have under this proposal.

Paragraph 13.99

Consultation Question 72.

1.95 We invite consultees' views as to whether payment of costs by the intended parents to the surrogate should be able to be:

(1) based on an allowance;

(2) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, but without the need for production of receipts; or

(3) based on costs actually incurred by the surrogate, and only on production of receipts.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.16

Consultation Question 73.

1.96 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate essential costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered "essential".

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.22

Consultation Question 74.

1.97 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate additional costs relating to the pregnancy; and

(2) the types of expenditure which should be considered additional, rather than essential.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above the actual essential costs of the pregnancy and birth – such as medical supplies, extra food and vitamins, and travel to medical appointments – backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.26

Consultation Question 75.

1.98 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether intended parents should be permitted to pay all costs that arise from entering into a surrogacy arrangement, and those unique to a surrogate pregnancy; and

(2) the types of cost which should be included within this category.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.29

Consultation Question 76.

1.99 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate her actual lost earnings (whether the surrogate is employed or self-employed).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.37

Consultation Question 77.

1.100 We invite consultees' views as to whether they consider that intended parents should be able to pay their surrogate either or both of the following lost potential earnings:

(1) her lost employment-related potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.35 above); and/or

(2) other lost potential earnings (as defined in paragraph 15.36 above).

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for lost earnings.

Paragraph 15.38

Consultation Question 78.

1.101 We invite consultees to share their experiences:

(1) of the impact that payments received by a surrogate from the intended parents has had on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits; and

(2) where a surrogacy arrangement has had an impact on the surrogate's entitlement to means-tested social welfare benefits, how that has been addressed in their surrogacy arrangement.

N/A

Paragraph 15.47

Consultation Question 79.

1.102 We invite consultees' views as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate for the following:

(1) pain and inconvenience arising from the pregnancy and childbirth;

(2) medical treatments relating to the surrogacy, including payments for each insemination or embryo transfer; and/or

(3) specified complications, including hyperemesis gravidarum, pre-eclampsia, an ectopic pregnancy, miscarriage, termination, caesarean birth, excessive haemorrhaging, perineal tearing, removal of fallopian tubes or ovaries or a hysterectomy.

It is absurd to propose that one could place a monetary value on the pain of adverse pregnancy outcomes. In putting a price tag on perineal tear for example, some mothers report little pain or symptoms, others have profound ongoing fear of vaginal penetration, which can result in very significant emotional and relationship difficulties. Infection may complicate healing, and some women report long term sequelae from this, such as impaired wound healing.

Haematology conditions should also be considered. Blood loss, for example due to placental haemorrhage can be very significant, and potentially result in emergency hysterectomy and blood transfusion to save the life of the mother. It is a fact that although blood is thoroughly screened in the UK there still remains the potential for blood borne illnesses to be transmitted, and the fact that some of these may not have been identified yet by researchers is also a real risk to a mother receiving transfusion. Persons who have had a blood transfusion are currently unable to donate blood themselves in the UK, due to the risk of (vCJD) transmission. This is an indication of the gravity of receiving blood products.

No medical intervention is EVER risk free. Receiving multiple blood products in the context of Massive Transfusion Protocol (eg platelets, Fresh Frozen Plasma, cryoprecipitate) only heighten those risks.

Conditions such as HELLP (Haemolysis, Elevated Liver enzymes, Low Platelets) can be fatal, and although the maternal mortality rate is low, it can have significant sequelae, including renal failure potentially requiring dialysis, placental abruption (potentially fatal for mother and baby) permanent liver damage and retinal detachment resulting in visual impairment.

Each of these conditions have long term consequences for a woman, psychologically, physically and emotionally, and may also affect her ability to return to work or care for other children.

Also, the late complications of childbirth have been disregarded. Late consequences of childbirth can include vaginal or rectal prolapse, urinary and faecal incontinence. Women who have had a C section may experience ongoing pain around the scar. Some sources quote this as affecting between 6 and 18 percent of women. These symptoms can be profoundly distressing, and may take years to present (conversely, may present immediately).

How could we ensure that women suffering these complications are compensated? They are multifactorial, and risk increases with instrumented delivery and parity. How would it be proposed to unpick the role of a surrogate pregnancy in causing these symptoms in relation to other risk factors, for example parity, smoking history, personal medical history?

Psychiatric conditions are also absent from this list. Complications including depression and anxiety may be worsened by pregnancy. Other mental health conditions such as post natal depression and post partum psychosis can be fatal, and impact on a woman's health for many years to come. I'm quite shocked that none of these conditions have been explicitly mentioned and it does make me wonder how the list of complications was created. I'd also like to know what level of haemorrhage would be considered "excessive".

The wording of the question "should" be able to pay compensation is not the same as being mandated to do so. This potentially creates a situation where some "luckier" women would receive compensation others would not.

All of the above illustrates the risks of surrogacy and confirms my support for a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.103 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other matters in respect of which intended parents should be able to pay the surrogate compensation.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain.

1.104 We invite consultees' views as to whether the level of compensation payable should be:

(1) a fixed fee set by the regulator (operating as a cap on the maximum payable), or

(2) left to the parties to negotiate.

Paragraph 15.53

Consultation Question 80.

1.105 We invite consultees views' as to whether intended parents should be able to pay compensation to the surrogate's family in the event of the pregnancy resulting in the surrogate's death, including through payment of the cost of life assurance for the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question illustrates the risks of surrogacy and why I oppose it.

Paragraph 15.56

Consultation Question 81.

1.106 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) intended parents should be able to buy gifts for the surrogate; and

(2) if so, specific provision should be made for these gifts to be modest or reasonable in nature.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to give the birth mother gifts.

Paragraph 15.60

Consultation Question 82.

1.107 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy.

It should not be possible for the intended parents to agree to pay a woman for the service of undertaking a surrogacy. (check box)

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.108 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman for the service of undertaking surrogacy, whether that the fee should be:

(1) any sum agreed between the parties to the surrogacy; or

(2) a fixed fee set by the regulator.

Leave both check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to pay the birth mother for her 'services'.

1.109 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if provision is made for intended parents to pay a woman a fixed fee for the service of undertaking surrogacy, what, if any, other payments the law should permit, in addition to that fixed fee:

(1) no other payments;

(2) essential costs relating to the pregnancy;

(3) additional costs relating to the pregnancy;

(4) lost earnings;

(5) compensation for pain and inconvenience, medical treatment and complications, and the death of the surrogate; and/or

(6) gifts.

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

I am therefore opposed to allowing the 'intended parents' to make any type of fee or payment to the birth mother for her 'services'.

Paragraph 15.69

Consultation Question 83.

1.110 We invite consultees' views as to whether it should be possible for any payment the law permits the intended parents to pay the surrogate for her services to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination of the pregnancy.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

This question is therefore not applicable because I oppose the payment of birth mothers for their 'services'. However, it illustrates the grave risks of surrogacy.

1.111 We invite consultees' views as to whether, if the law permits a fee payable to the surrogate to be able to be reduced in the event of a miscarriage or termination, whether such provision should apply:

(1) in the first trimester of pregnancy only;
(2) to any miscarriage or termination; or
(3) some other period of time (please specify).

Leave all check boxes blank.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

Paragraph 15.72

Consultation Question 84.

1.112 We provisionally propose that the types of payment that are permitted to be made to surrogates should be the same, whether the surrogacy follows our new pathway to parenthood or involves a post-birth application for a parental order.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I am opposed to the 'new pathway' but consider that regardless of the surrogacy arrangement being used, the only payments that should ever be made are essential and basic expenses for which receipts are provided.

Paragraph 15.74

Consultation Question 85.

1.113 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any categories of payment we have not discussed which they think intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

Paragraph 15.75

Consultation Question 86.

1.114 We invite consultees to express any further views they have about the payments that intended parents should be able to agree to pay to the surrogate.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

I would like to see a total ban on surrogacy in the UK, as there is in Spain. If surrogacy is accepted, however, legislation should allow no payments to the birth mother above actual essential costs, backed up by receipts.

Paragraph 15.76

Consultation Question 87.

1.115 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are specific methods of enforcing limitations that are placed on payments to surrogates that we should consider as part of our review:

(1) for cases within the new pathway to parenthood; and

(2) for cases where a parental order is made after the birth of the baby.

I am opposed to paid surrogacy because it commercialises women's reproductive functions, commodifies children, and risks the sale of children, against which there is an international prohibition. Surrogacy is therefore a violation of the human rights of both women and children.

There is rising inequality in the UK and any payments above the reimbursement of the most essential and basic expenses will act as an incentive to poor women to engage in surrogacy when it is not in their best interests.

The only payments that should be made are essential and basic expenses and for which receipts are provided. The judge or other competent authority should closely monitor all financial aspects of the arrangement (in line with the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations*) and refuse the parental order when payments have exceeded basic expenses. If it is not a judge overseeing the arrangements, the competent authority should be totally independent and not, for example, an agency (or 'regulated surrogacy organisation') that has been involved in the arrangements in any way.

Paragraph 15.89

Consultation Question 88.

1.116 We provisionally propose that financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway to parenthood should be enforceable by the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

1.117 We provisionally propose that if the financial terms of a surrogacy agreement entered into under the new pathway become enforceable, the ability to do so should not be dependent on the surrogate complying with any terms of the agreement relating to her lifestyle.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'. The idea that a 'surrogacy agreement' could place restrictions on the birth mother's lifestyle is utterly abhorrent.

Paragraph 16.12

Consultation Question 91.

1.120 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of their experience of applying to register a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement as a British citizen and obtaining a passport for the child. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have about causes of delays in the process.

N/A

Paragraph 16.52

Consultation Question 92.

1.121 We provisionally propose that it should be possible for a file to be opened, and the application process for obtaining registration of a child born from an international surrogacy arrangement and obtaining a passport to begin, prior to the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.53

Consultation Question 93.

1.122 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a visa for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular, we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

Paragraph 16.68

Consultation Question 94.

1.123 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a visa in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child, and the issue of a passport in the child's country of birth.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for registration of birth and a passport before the child is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

1.124 We provisionally propose that the current provision made for the grant of a visa outside of the Immigration Rules where the intended parents are not the legal parents of the child under nationality law should be brought within the Rules.

Do consultees agree?

NO

1.125 We provisionally propose that:

(1) the grant of a visa should not be dependent on the child breaking links with the surrogate; or

(2) that this condition should be clarified to ensure that it does not prevent the child having contact, and an on-going relationship, with the surrogate.

Do consultees agree?

YES

1.126 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current requirement for the grant of a visa outside the Rules that the intended parents must apply for a parental order within six months of the child's birth should be removed (regardless of whether the availability of the visa is brought within the Rules), if our provisional proposal to remove the time limit on applications for parental orders is accepted.

NO

The time limit should be retained but the court should be able to dispense with it in certain circumstances when this is in the best interests of the child.

Paragraph 16.69

Consultation Question 95.

1.127 We provisionally propose that it should be possible to open a file, and begin the process for applying for a EU Uniform Format Form in respect of a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement, before the child is born. The application will need to be completed after the birth of the child.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Allowing the 'intended parents' to start the application process for an EU Uniform Format Form for the child before she or he is born in international surrogacy arrangements appears to contradict the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations* that are designed to protect against the selling and trafficking of children and the protection of the rights of the birth mother. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.76

Consultation Question 96.

1.128 We invite consultees to provide us with evidence of the experience they have had of applying for a EU Uniform Format Form for a child born through an international surrogacy arrangement. In particular we would be interested to hear how long the application took after the birth of the child, and any information consultees have of causes of delays in the process.

Paragraph 16.77

Consultation Question 97.

1.129 We provisionally propose that the UK Government should provide a single, comprehensive guide for intended parents explaining the nationality and immigration consequences of having a child through an international surrogacy arrangement.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I agree with such a guide, but would like to see it explaining the reasons why surrogacy is a violation of the human rights of women and children and all the other ways in which it is possible for people to enjoy children in their lives.

Paragraph 16.82

Consultation Question 98.

1.130 We provisionally propose that international surrogacy arrangements should not be eligible for the new pathway to parenthood.

Do consultees agree?

OTHER

I profoundly disagree with the proposals for the 'new pathway'.

Paragraph 16.93

Consultation Question 99.

1.131 We provisionally propose that:

1.132 the Secretary of State should have the power to provide that the intended parents of children born through international surrogacy arrangements, who are recognised as the legal parents of the child in the country of the child's birth, should also be recognised as the child's legal parents in the UK, without it being necessary for the intended parents to apply for a parental order, but

1.133 before exercising the power, the Secretary of State should be required to be satisfied that the domestic law and practice in the country in question provides protection against the exploitation of surrogates, and for the welfare of the child, that is at least equivalent to that provided in UK law.

Do consultees agree?

NO

I do not see how this proposal for such a blanket power would align with the UN Special Rapporteur's key recommendations* and the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993. The latter requires the birth mother to have legal parenthood and parental responsibility when the child is born and that her consent to giving up the child must be given AFTER the child's birth and that the transfer of 'parenthood' should be overseen by the courts or a competent authority on an individual case by case basis, with the best interests of the child being the paramount consideration. This is an important safeguard against the sale of children and for the protection of the birth mother and I believe it should apply equally to international surrogacy arrangements. I therefore strongly disagree with this proposal.

Paragraph 16.94

Consultation Question 100.

1.134 We invite consultees to tell us of their experience of surrogacy arrangements in the UK involving foreign intended parents.

N/A

1.135 We invite consultees' views as to whether:

(1) any restriction is necessary on the removal of a child from the UK for the purpose of the child becoming the subject of a parental order, or its equivalent, in another jurisdiction; and

(2) if such a restriction is necessary, there should be a process allowing foreign intended parents to remove the child from the jurisdiction of the UK for this purpose and with the approval of the court and, if so, what form should that process take.

Restrictions and checks MUST be in place to protect the child and the birth mother from trafficking and exploitation. The process should include the same checks as would be used in an international adoption.

Paragraph 16.120

Consultation Question 101.

1.136 We invite consultees' views as to whether the current application of the law on statutory paternity leave, and statutory paternity pay, to the situation of the surrogate's spouse, civil partner or partner requires reform.

I do not believe this needs changing.

Paragraph 17.18

Consultation Question 102.

1.137 We provisionally propose that provision for maternity allowance should be made in respect of intended parents, and that any such provision should be limited so that only one intended parent qualifies.

Do consultees agree?

NO

Paragraph 17.32

Consultation Question 103.

1.138 We invite consultees' views as to:

(1) whether there is a need for reform in respect of the right of intended parents to take time off work before the birth of the child, whether for the purpose of induced lactation, ante-natal appointments or any other reason; and

(2) if reform is needed, suggestions on reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.36

Consultation Question 104.

1.139 We invite consultees' views as to whether the duty of employers to provide suitable facilities for any person at work who is a pregnant woman or nursing mother to rest under Regulation 25 of the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 is sufficient to include intended parents in a surrogacy arrangement.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children.

Paragraph 17.40

Consultation Question 105.

1.140 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are further issues in relation to employment rights and surrogacy arrangements and, if so, any suggestions for reform.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.43

Consultation Question 106.

1.141 We invite consultees' views as to whether they believe any reforms in relation to surrogacy and succession law are required.

I am opposed to any reform in this area because it would act to normalise surrogacy, which is a human rights abuse of both women and children

Paragraph 17.56

Consultation Question 107.

1.142 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any issues in how surrogacy arrangements are dealt with by the health services, and whether there are reforms to law or practice that consultees would like to see in this area.

It is important that all health and care professionals are aware that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that 'intended parents' have no legal right to override the birth mother's wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour and childbirth. Even if she has previously agreed to them sharing decisions and being informed on these matters, she can withdraw her consent at any time for any or no reason. All professionals involved in her care are duty-bound to comply with her wishes.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

Surrogacy arrangements place additional and complicated pressures on healthcare staff and this could reduce the standard of impartial care given to birth mothers and new-borns – especially when the 'intended parents' are entitled, rich or of high status. This itself is a valid reason to be extremely cautious about making changes that will increase the numbers of surrogacy births.

It is generally recognised that egg donation and IVF pregnancies carry additional health risks. As most surrogacy pregnancies involve IVF, any increase in surrogacy is likely to lead to additional pressure on the NHS.

Adoption research suggests that the separation of the new-born and the birth mother has long-term negative effects on the well-being of both of them. This is likely to be the same for birth mothers and babies in surrogacy arrangements and so can be expected to place additional long-term pressures on the NHS and society as a whole. This has not been considered and there are no questions about this.

An increase in surrogacy will require an increase in egg donation, which is a risky procedure that can have a long-term negative impact on the woman's health, including premature death. Ethical issues abound. Young women might be coerced by financial pressures to donate eggs when this isn't in their best interests and there are worries about eugenics – where egg donors are selected on the basis of blonde hair, blue eyes and stereotypical measures of 'attractiveness' for example.

The law commissioners do not appear to have considered the likely impact of any of these issues. There is no question about people's thoughts about the NHS picking up the tab for the extra costs involved in surrogacy and whether this affects their opinions on surrogacy itself. There appears to have been no evaluation of the size of the additional costs to the NHS and society.

At a time when the NHS is under severe strain, and life changing therapies (for cancer, cystic fibrosis etc) are not funded due to financial constraints it is a slap in the face to provide money for prospective parents to indulge their parenting fantasies while denying patients access to drugs which are standard of care in other counties.

1.143 We invite consultees' views as to any additions or revisions that they would like to see made to the guidance published by the Department for Health and Social Care for England and Wales.

The guidance should be revised to clarify that surrogacy agreements are not legally binding and that the birth mother has the right to change her mind at any time, for any or no reason. Healthcare professionals must accept that her wishes are paramount and that the 'intended parents' have no legal right to override her wishes or decisions in regards to her lifestyle or medical and health care, including during pregnancy, labour, childbirth and the postpartum period.

All health and care professionals should also be aware that the birth mother may be being coerced to engage in the surrogacy arrangement by one or more persons, including her spouse or partner. If paid surrogacy is legalised, this will become more prevalent, but it can still be present in so-called altruistic surrogacy arrangements.

The guidance should make it clear that healthcare professionals should be even more alert than normal to the possibility that she is being coerced and to ensure that they can speak to her alone, including during labour, and that if she changes her mind about who is present in consultations, and the labour ward/delivery suite, they must respect her wishes.

1.144 We invite consultees' views as to how midwifery practice may better accommodate surrogacy arrangements, in particular with regard to safeguarding issues.

It is important that midwifery practice always prioritises the wishes of the birth mother and the wellbeing of herself and the child.

Paragraph 17.76

Consultation Question 108.

1.145 We invite consultees' views as to whether there are any other legal issues in relation to surrogacy, not covered in this Consultation Paper, that merit examination.

It is of considerable concern that the law commissioners appear to have given no consideration to the significant risk that women will be coerced into agreeing to participate in surrogacy arrangements for someone else's benefit. This can be true in 'altruistic' surrogacy but is even more likely if substantial payments are involved.

It is well-known that women and girls are groomed and/or coerced into prostitution by partners and 'boyfriends' who act as their pimp and take all or much of their earnings. This is a major route by which many women enter prostitution and is a major factor in preventing their exit. There is no reason to expect that the same dynamics will not occur in relation to surrogacy if it is opened up and provides opportunities to make significant amounts of money.

If the law commissioners' proposals are enacted, there must therefore also be legislation that prohibits coercing a woman into a surrogacy arrangement. This should be a criminal offence and carry a hefty penalty – in recognition that it is a human rights violation and so that it acts as a deterrent. That such a law would be difficult to enforce just adds to the arguments for why paid surrogacy is a bad idea – and especially for women.

It would be far better to simply ban all surrogacy arrangements – or at the very least any payments beyond basic and essential expenses backed by receipts and overseen by a judge.

Paragraph 17.80

Consultation Question 109.

1.146 We invite consultees who are intended parents, live in the UK, and have entered into a surrogacy arrangement that led to the birth of a child to tell us:

(1) when the child was born;

(2) whether the arrangement was domestic or international and, if international, in which country the arrangement took place;

(3) whether the arrangement led to the making of a parental order in the UK; and

(4) whether they are a:

(a) opposite-sex couple;

(c) female same-sex couple;

(d) single woman; or

(e) single man.

Paragraph 18.2

Consultation Question 110.

1.147 We invite consultees who have experience of applying for a parental order in the UK to tell us:

(1) whether the surrogacy arrangement was domestic or international;

(3) whether they were represented by a lawyer in court; and

(4) the cost of any legal advice or representation.

Consultation Question 111.

1.148 We invite consultees' views as to the impact (social, emotional, financial or otherwise) of the current law where the intended parents are not the legal parents from birth of the child born of the surrogacy arrangement.

Paragraph 18.6

Consultation Question 112.

1.149 We invite consultees to tell us what they have paid for, or to provide evidence about the cost of:

(1) medical screening; and

(2) implications counselling

1.150 We invite legal consultees, who advise on surrogacy and parental order proceedings, to provide evidence of what they would charge:

(1) to provide advice sufficient to meet the proposed requirement for independent legal advice discussed in Chapter 13; and

(2) to draft, advise on and negotiate the written surrogacy agreement required for the new pathway.

N/A

Paragraph 18.8

Consultation Question 113.

1.151 We invite consultees to tell us of the impact of:

(1) the current requirement of a genetic link; and

(2) any removal of this requirement in cases of medical necessity:

(a) in the new pathway;

(b) in the parental order route for domestic surrogacy arrangements; or

(c) in both situations.

Paragraph 18.11

Consultation Question 114.

(1) their profession; and

(2) what they would charge to provide such a service.

Paragraph 18.20

Consultation Question 118.

1.157 We invite consultees' views as to any other impact that we have not specifically addressed in this chapter, or the preceding chapters, of this paper.

It seems that before the law commissioners designed this consultation, they had already decided that surrogacy is a positive thing and so legislation should enable it. This may be explained by a limited 'pre-consultation' mainly focusing on people who already had a vested interest in surrogacy – 'intended parents,' women who claim to have had a positive experience of surrogacy, and lawyers and other organisations who stand to make money from commercial surrogacy if it is given the green light.

It seems that the law commissioners did not consider women as a group to be key stakeholders in this endeavour. This is a major error, because just as all women are affected by the institution of prostitution, so all women will be affected by any opening up of commercial surrogacy in this country.

It could even be argued that one of the key drivers of commercial surrogacy is a desire by men to break the legal and cultural recognition of the unique bond between birth mother and child – and indeed the proposals to make the 'intended parents' the legal parents from the moment of birth are a major step in this direction, and are likely to have a significant impact down the line – potentially affecting the status of all women.

Paid surrogacy opens up enormous potential for abuse and risks spouses, partners and other family members coercing a woman into engaging in commercial surrogacy for their (and not her) financial benefit. This will be a potential risk for thousands of women, which appears to have been completely overlooked by the law commissioners.

UK and Scottish Law Commissions are obliged to comply with the Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) when carrying out public functions, such as this consultation. There doesn't appear to be any evidence they have done so, because they have not provided their equality considerations and impact assessments. As surrogacy has a very different impact on women and children than on adult males, we believe the law commissioners are in breach of equality legislation.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission describes the obligations under the PSED to have due regard to the need to:

- Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act.
- Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.
- Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

There are many ways in which opening up surrogacy in the UK is likely to worsen women's position relative to men's, and the relationship between the sexes. Any loosening of the laws around surrogacy could therefore be considered discriminatory. Surrogacy is also likely to have an impact on the relations between the different generations. Imagine the rage that young people may feel when they discover that their 'parents' not only bought them but took advantage of their birth mothers.

It is of major concern that the law commissioners' ethical arguments hinge on ideas that are not based on any recognised human rights instruments – such as the idea that 'procreative liberty' confers some kind of human right to surrogacy and the idea that a woman has a human right to be a 'surrogate.' These arguments do not hold up to scrutiny and have been clearly rejected by the UN Special Rapporteur.*

It is shocking that the proposals for the 'new pathway' violate many of the recommendations of the UN Special Rapporteur that are designed to guard against the sale of children and the exploitation of birth mothers, including:

- The birth mother must be accorded the status of legal mother at birth, and must be under no contractual or legal obligation to participate in the legal or physical transfer of the child.
- All payments to the birth mother must be made before the legal and physical transfer of the child and must be non-reimbursable – even if she decides not to relinquish the child.
- The birth mother's choice to transfer the child "must be a gratuitous act, based on her own post-birth intentions, rather than on any legal or contractual obligation."
- Pre-conception checks, while encouraged, cannot take the place of appropriate welfare checks after the birth of the child.
- Decisions about parentage and parental responsibility must be made by a court or other competent authority on an individual basis after the birth with the best interests of the child being paramount.

The consultation is confusing and it does not conform to the government's consultation guidelines. There are too many questions, they are too detailed and do not ask the important high-level questions – such as whether you think surrogacy can ever be ethical, etc.

For all these reasons, the law commissioners should go back to the drawing board and start again from the position of women's and children's human rights. If it is found that there is no way to liberalise surrogacy law that is compliant with obligations under international treaties such as CEDAW and the UNCRC and its first optional protocol, then the law must not be liberalised.
